Open pollinated and hybrid corn certified for seed totals 17,000 bushels, enough for about eight per cent of the Michigan corn acreage. Decker suggests greater use of certified seed by the average farmer. Potato growers seeking a high quality product for market might find it an advantage to use certified seed each year, he says. Grains, such as oats, barley, wheat and beans can be guarded through careful production and clean threshing, but ought to be replaced with new seed each three years. Certified growers find their specialized industry holds two goals, to increase and perpetuate new varieties and to perpetuate purity in varieties.

GOOD ALARM CLOCK

Wakens Neighbors at 5:30 With Yawning Roar.

GROTON, CONN.-John S. Hanover has a 19-year-old 200-pound alligator that serves as an alarm clock for his early-rising neighbors. Promptly at 5:30 every morning the reptile, without any preliminaries, opens his massive jaws and lets out a mighty bellow.

Although Hanover has had his pet for 14 years, only his immediate neighbors have been aware of its existence. Others have probably wondered for years over the source of the weird roar that has snapped them out of a sound sleep seven days a week.

Alligators, outside of zoos, are unusual pets in New England Hanover's was a foot long when his brother shipped it to him from Florida. Now it measures 6 feet and has survived the changeable climate with robust indifference.

"Despite the fact that such reptiles usually die when shipped north," Hanover said, "I don't see why an alligator shouldn't live to a ripe old age and a good length in New England, provided it receives the proper care'

Hanover has a couple of bathing pools, one in a heavy wire enclosure fixed to a cement base and another in the steam-heated cellar, where Wallace the reptile endures in the winter and early spring months. Hanover has the task of taking it inside in the fall and bringing it out in the summer. He first straps the alligator's jaws. Discovering that the animal's main power in its jaws is downward, only two fingers are required to keep the jaws closed until they are strapped. Then he tosses the 'gator under his arm and over his back so that the tail, just as dangerous as the jaws, is harmless. One swat of the reptile's tail is History Repeating.

Bad Axe, (MPA)—On January 6, 1914, a boat was washed ashore at Harbor Beach and burned. This year, 25 years later to the day, there were reports that a boat was seen blown up in Lake Huron between Port Hope and Harbor Beach. The reports proved without foundation. Was history trying to repeat itself, or were trainmen who reported flames 25 years late in sighting the burning vessel.

DEFORD

Mr. and Mrs. George A. Martin attended a Frances Willard centenary memorial program sponsored by the Ministerial Association of Port Huron and held in that city on February 16. The principal address was given by Mrs. Dora B. Whitney of Benton Harbor, president of the Michigan Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Other addresses were given by the mayor, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce and representatives of the St. Clair W. C. T. U., the Parent-Teachers' Association, and the American Legion and by several ministers. The Port Huron High School Band furnished music for the occasion.

ford mentioned the fact that the million pounds, or 26 million above meeting completed the twenty-fifth the previous fiscal year. year of the club's existence, and that but few of the present members were among those that belonged that first year. Good fellowship has always prevailed among the members, because controversial subjects, such as religious beliefs and political differences, are forbidden in the articles of the constitution governing the club. The March meeting will be held at the William Bentley home for dinner.

Members of the local W. C. T. U. have planned a program to be given Tuesday evening, February 28, at the Deford Church. Admission will be free, but all will be privileged to contribute in a freewill offering, to be used in conspicuously placing a temperance road sign at the intersection of the Deford road and M-53. The program will be at eight o'clock. Following the program, a potluck lunch will be served in the dining room. Everyone is welcome to participate. Bring your own dishes with you. Address, B. H. Mc-Comb of Caro. Readings, Miss Blanche Hawley of Caro. Musical selection, Jerry Hicks, the one-man band. Vocal number, men's quartet.

Sunday guests of Miss Belle Spencer were Mr. and Mrs. Ray Wiltse of Clifford and Mrs. Vandetta Snider of Caro.

Mr. and Mrs. William Kelley, Mr. and Mrs. Harley Kelley and Mr. and Mrs. Walter Kelley and sons, Leland and Warren, were Sunday dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Kelley at Caro.

Mrs. H. D. Malcolm spent Monday afternoon with Mrs. Robert Brown at Caro.

Mrs. Jane Stevenson is getting weaker. Because of her illness, her daughter, Mrs. Morley Palmateer, with her husband, came on Monday. Mr. and Mrs. Palmateer were in Florida, where they spend the winter months each year.

DAIRY MARKET PROSPECTS.

Dairymen, viewing the prospects for income improvement in their industry, find several disturbing bugbears besides expensive and erratic methods in the distributing 10 points. The line-up: end of the business.

Cow prices continue rather high and the number of milking cows in the country is still on the upgrade. Feeds are comparatively plentiful and low-priced. Butter in storage on February 1, 1939, was over 111 million pounds against a 5-year average on that date of about 38 million. Evaporated milk held in stock by manufacturers on January 1 was nearly 205 million pounds against a 5-year average of about 160 million. Cheese in storage exceeds the average hold-The Farmers' Club met Friday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. C. West. Forty were present. 66 ALWAYS used to keep my hardwood floors like glass," writes Mrs. A. K. "But now that I have three children I find it impossible to keep the floors looking as I'd like to have them. So my problem is to get extra rugs to cover the floors.

"There is quite a large reception hall as you enter which leads into the living room. I have taupe rugs for the living room and dining room but in the past I haven't had anything on the hall floor. I expect to move the dining room rug into a bedroom and will get a new rug for the living room and also a new rug for the reception hall.

"Soon we expect to recover the living room suite-what would you suggest? The dining room furniture will be replaced eventually, but in the meantime we have to make the most of the old stuff. The walls are plain cream. Do draperies in dining room and living room have to match? There are venetian blinds in these two rooms. But in the reception room the door with transom and side panels of glass have shades with shirred marquisette curtains. Does that sound all right to you or would you get drapery material and drape over the side panels of door? What should I use in the reception hall for furniture? At present I have a desk and a radio there. Is that proper? Any suggestions you might make would be appreciated."

It will be quite all right to have rugs for your reception hall and living room in a different color from that in the dining room. Why not choose a soft gray-green, not too dark and in a texture effect that won't show foot marks? Then for the sofa have the new covering in a green ground printed mohair but with the design in bright contrast. The other two upholstered chairs might do in a gayly flame colored material—all these coverings would they can come off for washing. Draperies in this same flame color would be very heartening.

Arranging Old Furniture in a New House.

"We have a new house," writes Vivian A., "and of course we're so eager to have everything just right. We must use our old furniture, but we will need to buy new lamps, tables, rugs, etc. The living room is first in our thoughts right now and we don't want to go ahead without your advice. Mother and I read your column all the time.

"This living room is 27 by 15 feet. The walls are a light french gray warmed with umber. Woodwork, mantel and bookcases are light ivory-there is a six-foot mirror over the mantel. We have already bought and made draperies of burnished rose with a dull pattern in ivory and turquoise. Should we have marquisette glass curtains in ivory or a shade to blend with the rose? We have been considering an eggplant rug to cover almost the entire floor-how does that sound? Our furniture is dark mahogany and walnut. We're getting all new small tables-if we have Chinese Chippen dale in the room, would it be correct to have an old rococo mirror made into a coffee table? This Best by Circling

Aunt Mamie, Who "Enjoyed" Poor Health, Dr. Christopher Cragg and Editor Phil Buchanan, in the New Serial Story

CHAPTER I

Mary looked about the living room with mingled emotions of affection and despair. Phrony had just completed the first thorough cleaning it had undergone in two months, and the place did not seem quite as clut- of food, although she was constanttered as usual. The woodwork and furniture had been polished with hearing about a meal was a pleassomething Aunt Mamie had bought ure, and now being informed that from a door-to-door salesman; the beef and cauliflower were in store windows shone from yesterday's for her, her attention was diverted "nine-by-twelve" positively stood up as a result of Phrony's vigorous lia Ormsby's visit. sweeping with the ancient, but still active, vacuum cleaner. Holly station with Dad, or shall I?" wreaths, tied with rather too narrow red ribbon, hung at each window, while Aunt Mamie now labored over the arrangement of a bunch of the same leaves for a vase on the mantel.

"The house looks more festive than it has for years," Mary re-"Christmas decmarked happily. orations certainly help."

Aunt Mamie compressed her thin lips. "Not half as much as a good, first class cleaning," she replied. "Why your mother puts up, year after year, with incompetent help is beyond my understanding. Of course, this isn't my house, and it's not up to me to interfere.'

ened defiantly. "You know why Christmas shopping. A green-shad-Mother puts up with incompetent help, as you call it, Aunt Mamie. Phrony's the only maid we can get in Hawkinsville who'll cook for this big family, and clean, and wash, for five dollars a week."

Aunt Mamie, her father's maiden on Mary's nerves as the years case that was probably tried somehospitality for two decades now, yet she eternally found fault with Mrs. Loring's housekeeping, criticized the conduct of Mary, her eighteen-yearold sister Ellen, and their harumscarum and adorable little brother. Peter: complained constantly about her health, which, as far as the Lorings could determine, was about on a par with that of a truck horse; continually referred to the purely imaginary men she might have married. In fact, as time had worn on, Mamie's illusory suitors had become more and more real in Mamie's mind, increasingly ardent in their affection for her: their words. never actually spoken, their deeds never actually committed, more and more colorful and graphic in her frequent recitals of them.

Mrs. Loring, always eager to avert unpleasant feeling, eternally seeking peace at the cost of any concession she might make, forced a smile to her lips. "How charming everything looks!" she exclaimed brightly. "I know Linnie and Lelia will think the house is sweet. It's been years since they've seen it you know.'

Mamie turned about, and gazed dolefully at her sister-in-law. "Too many years, I'd say," she remarked. "Seems to me a woman that was born and raised in Hawkinsville would see fit to return to her home town a little oftener: but, of course, Linnie always was a gadder.'

Mrs. Loring flushed to the roots of her dark hair. "Well, why shouldn't she be a gadder, Mamie? She has no ties, whatsoever; she loves to travel, and she has a very nice income." Mary hadn't seen her mother's sister, Linnie Cotswell, for ten years, but she was quite willing to fly to her defense. "I think she's a darned good sport," she said defiantly, "and if I were in her shoes, I'd live just the sort of life she's chosen to live-Europe in the summer, New York in the autumn, Florida for the winter."

"And dashing about, spending other people's money, like a drunken sailor!" Mamie persisted, the tip of her long thin nose twitching convulsively.

Mrs. Loring seated herself in one of the armchairs by the round center table, and with apparent calm, picked up the Hawkinsville Journal, fluttered it open, and pretended to read the headlines. "The money Linnie spends is her own," she said, her eyes fixed unseeingly on the print. "It was bequeathed to herby several different people."

Intrigued by . revelation, Mary asked, "How come, Mother?"

"Stop saying 'how come,' Mary! I've told you again and again that I hate that expression. Well, when your Grandfather Cotswell died, Linnie was the only one of us who had not married, and he naturally felt that what money he had should go to her. He thought—that since all the rest of his daughters had husbands, we would, of course, be provided for."

"Dirty trick, I'd say!" sniffed Mamie. "I can't see why one daughter should have been singled out. How did he know Linnie wouldn't later marry some man that'd outshine the husbands of all the others? Too bad he didn't set aside a tidy sum for you, Janet."

Mrs. Loring's eyes clouded. "Jim was a very promising young lawyer at the time, Mamie. My father had no reason to believe that-that we would later have to struggle—as we have had to do.'

"We're having a very nice dinner," Mrs. Loring went on, trying valiantly to avert a clash. "I bought lovely roast beef at Haubert's, and Phrony's going to try Mrs. Upham's recipe for French-frying those little hearts of cauliflower.'

Mamie's eyes glittered with anticipation. She was inordinately fond ly telling how little she ate. Even washing; the nap of the Axminster from the topic of the inconvenience caused by Linnie Cotswell's and Le-

Five minutes later, Mary was speeding through the wintry dusk, up Concert street to Seventh, down Seventh to Main, and up the rather dirty brown steps that led to her father's dingy law offices in the Cactus building. A light snow had begun to drift earthwards, and to cover the little town with a magic car-

He was alone, his one office assistant being Ellen, who had left an hour Mary's young shoulders straight- before to do some last-minute ed electric bulb shone down upon his thinning hair and the wellthumbed law book over which he was poring. She had been dependent where fifty years ago! Well, it's a good thing the railroad keeps him on as their local attorney. Heaven knows, his cases of any other sort are few and far between, and pay practically nothing when they do come."

> He glanced up as she entered, his face lighting with a smile as he saw how smart she looked in the new fur coat she had bought from her own savings, and the little hat that dipped rakishly over one eye. "How pretty you look, my dear!" he exclaimed, rising from his chair with that old-world courtliness which he extended even to his female children. "It must be getting colder. Your cheeks are almost crimson, and your eyes positively sparkle."

> Mary put her gloved hand on his "If my eyes are sparkling, Daddy, it's because of Aunt Linnie's coming—and not the weather conditions, although it is getting snappier every minute outdoors. Hurry. Dad. and close up shop. The train's due now in ten minutes. Good heavens. I don't believe you're at all excited over the arrival of our prodigal relatives!

> Mary linked one arm through her father's as the train blustered in. They were coming! They were coming! Those creatures from another world! Suddenly, she caught sight of them through the snow-splattered windows of the Pullman.

> Mary pressed forward, reaching Miss Cotswell as she stepped to the "Aunt Linnie!" she exground. claimed. "Aunt Linnie!"

Linnie Cotswell caught her in a swift, fragrant embrace, kissed her lightly, then wheeled about to the "Are you sure all my bags are here?" And, being assured that her six, and Lelia's three pieces, of pigskin luggage were duly piled together, she returned her attention to Mary. "My dear!" she exclaimed. "What a lovely young woman you've grown to be! This is Mary, isn't it? Darling, you were terrible in glasses and dental braces the last time I saw you! And Jim! Dear old Jim, how nice it is to see you! And, of course, you know this is Lelia!' Lelia, one lovely blue eye almost obscured from view by the dipping fur of the Cossack hat, extended a hand, first to Mary, and then to James Loring. The train began chug-chugging its way from the station, and Linnie glancing at her brother-in-law sensed his dismay. "Poor Jim," she laughed, "are you wondering why in the world we brought so many bags? Well, six of them are mine. When a woman reaches my age, you know, she simply has to carry about a lot of clothes, and astringents and cold creams in order to be constantly warding off the ravages of time.

Isn't there a redcap in the place?' Mary laughed. "Not one in a carload, Aunt Linnie, but I can manage at least three of those gorgeous bags. I'm young and strong and willing, as they always say in advertisements."

"And I can manage the other six," said Christopher Cragg, appearing suddenly from behind a baggage truck. "Why not let me take all of them in my car?"

"And why not?" retorted Mary, although her heart skipped a beat as it always so foolishly did when she came upon the young doctor unexpectedly. "Aunt Linnie, this is Christopher Cragg. Mrs. Ormsby, Doctor Cragg.'

Five minutes later, James Loring's car, carrying the three women, was crawling discreetly up Johnson Street hill, while Christopher Cragg's Chevrolet, filled to the roof with luggage, followed sedately.

"Where in the world did that young giant come from?" Linnie Cotswell demanded. "If only I were thirty years younger, I'd fall in love with him. He's not a Hawkinsville man, is he, Jim?"

"He's not from a Hawkinsville family," Mr. Loring returned, his eyes ahead of him as he piloted his old car towards Main street, "but he's chosen to live here. Old Doctor Ehinger died a year ago, you know, and this chap happened to finish his interneship at the Henrotin Hospital in Chicago just at that time. Well, he had gone to Harwith one of the Johnstone poys, so Johnstone, knowing Doctor Cragg was looking for an opening in a small town, wrote him about the practice and the office and the little house Doctor Ehinger had left without a head. Cragg dashed right down to Hawkinsville and bought out the whole works from Jessie.'

"But, Jim," asked Linnie, "wasn't Doctor Ehinger's equipment terribly antiquated? I can't see how a doctor just starting off in life could put up with it.'

"It was simply incredible," interpolated Mary. "Chris has thrown most of it out, and bought beautiful new stuff. Everything is white tile and glistening metal now. It seems he went through the deal with Miss Jessie just as a matter of good will, and really he's profiting by it. All the younger people in town are taking their children to him." "Even so," Linnie Cotswell said meditatively, "he can't expect to make a fortune in a town of this size. After all, a city's the place for a modern young doctor."

"Most people think he's just a little too modern for their tastes," returned Jim Loring. "After all, the old ways are the best."

"Oh, fiddlesticks," Linnie Cotswell chortled. "Why, isn't this your house?"

Mrs. Loring had lighted the place from top to bottom, and the freshly washed windows cast shafts of brightness into the night.

"What will Lelia Ormsby think of our home?" Mary asked herself. Aunt Linnie was in Mrs. Loring's arms now, and they were exclaiming and weeping and laughing all at the same time; then, Mrs. Loring them all into the hall, while Ellen and eight-year-old Peter rushed pellmell down the bare steps, with Bar- in rie, Pete's Airedale, following at their heels. Mary looked towards the curb to see if Chris was pulling up. Yes, there he was, opening the door of the car, dragging out Linnie's and Lelia's bags. She ran out to help him, insisting on carrying three of the smaller pieces, while he swooped the other six into his grasp. "Isn't she the loveliest thing you've ever seen, Chris?" whispered Mary, as they slipped and slid over the icy walk to the house.

"More abundant use" means cheaper electricity - in Michigan as elsewhere. As your use of electricity goes UP, the average price goes DOWN. And ONE CENT acquires tremendous buying power as you use more electricity!

For example, most residence customers can add additional electric appliances to their existing uses without greatly increasing their bill. It is wise economy to use more of these thrifty electric servants: ONE CENT will furnish soothing comfort from an electric heating pad for 10 hours . . . or brew 24 cups of coffee . . . or burn a "night light" in your bathroom or hallway every night for one week . . . or do most of the family wash on Monday ... or cook a tempting meal in the electric casserole.

Electricity is cheap! You can make free and unstinted use of lighting and appliances and not add much to your bill. Prove this by using all the electricity you need.

Lansing—How the Fitzgerald administration is going to rescue the schools, increase old age pensions and perform other heroic acts of tinancial generosity, while at the same time it effects that muchpromised $8,500,000 payroll saving appears now to merit the classification of a first-rate miracle.

Six weeks of consistent economy efforts by the governor have achieved some headway, but the goal is still a long ways off.

Senator McCallum of Ann Arbor, who solemnly warned voters last fall that the state deficit was in the neighborhood of $66,000,000, took his legislative colleagues to 18 R. R. Crossing task the other day by reviewing appropriation demands, already Deaths in 31 Days $55,000,000 a year in excess of anticipated revenue, and calling attention to the mounting cost of state institutions. It was a most gloomy talk.

The comment was voiced during gan. consideration of a $150,000 annual appropriation to advertise Michigan ator VanderWerp of Fremont, troit Free Press.

Michigan receives back in the form of sales taxes paid by outstate tourists ten times this appropriation every year.

$337,000 More Wages

An actual comparison of the state payroll in January, 1937, and in January, 1939, shows an increase of $337,000 on the Fitzgerald ledger instead of a decrease. The govwas $3,225 in January, 1939, as compared with $2,365 in January,

Of course, these facts paint a gloomy picture, but they are incomplete to the extent that much of Fitzgerald's economy deeds could not take immediate effect. dresses. Step No. 1 was to be a labor relations mediation board which was to settle strikes, if possible, without a loss of production for the manufacturer and a loss of wages for the workers.

Labor, Industry Critical

First, organized labor registered emphatic objections to the 10-day clause. While they liked legalized picketing, they opposed a requirement that only workers of the involved plant could demonstrate. They spoke heatedly of their "right to strike" without notice.

John Lovett, counsel for industrialist, declared that a permanent labor mediation board would incite trouble instead | day is described as the ideal work of preventing it. He suggested that a state commissioner be empowered to appoint a special arbitration committee to fit the particular needs of each labor difficulty and that restrictions be few in number if any at all.

Welfare Bill

Faced with a clash of interests between the cities and rural areas, Governor Fitzgerald has chosen to home.

Aimed to eliminate costly duplications of agencies handling relief and to promote efficiency and economy, the welfare measure follows closely the provisions of the welfare reorganization act defeated in last year's referendum. It provides for more local control which is satisfactory to supervisors, but allots welfare funds on the basis of need rather than of population, which suits city officials.

This is a controversial topic in Lansing, and the welfare bill will have tough sledding before it is enacted into law.

TREE SENTIMENT

Cut down that old apple tree if it is half dead and a carrier of disease, suggests E. J. Rasmussen, horticulturist at Michigan State College. Sentiment is poor defense in trying to care for the tree that grandfather planted. A smaller well handled orchard could supply high quality fruit with less labor. If there is sentiment associated with any special tree it is far better, in Rasmussen's opinion, to tne discarded trees.

Wanko started to build a fire in a home he recently purchased, which had been unoccupied for some time, the fire would not burn. He climbed on the roof and poked a long stick down the chimney. It came up covered with honey. There was a space over three feet solid with honey, which yielded about fifty pounds.
