Plans Received for Farm Shop Bldg. at Observed Here Cass City School

NYA Will Build Several Shops in Towns of Less Than 2,500 Population.

School officials have evidenced an interest in the erection of a farm shop on the school grounds at Cass City and have written federal authorities for particulars regarding the requirements necessary. Funds, school authorities here say, will be available for the costs of building materials. The plans submitted by the State Board of Control for Vocational Education call for a one-story brick building 42 and Mr. and Mrs. Paul Serratoni. by 90 feet. Tentative plans are to have the new building, if erected to occupy space north of the presstate and these farm shops may be built in communities with a popula-tion of not more than 2,500," writes George H. Fern, director of the State Board of Control for Vocational Education, in introducing the subject to J. Ivan Niergarth, superintendent of schools in Cass City. "It has been indicated to us that you are in need of a new building to be used for general and farm shop. The construction of the shop through the NYA requires the furnishing of materials by the local community. The NYA will also furnish the necessary architectural services.

ministration, Lansing.

"The state project is restricted to fourteen farm shop buildings," says Mr. Fern. "We are, therefore, anxious to know whether or not you are interested so that if necessary other schools may be given the opportunity.

'We are enclosing a blue print of a suggested floor plan for a farm shop building including an agricultural room. The plan is arranged so that the agricultural room may be omitted if this type of room is not needed. In no case, however, can just an agricultural room be provided. The program is based on the necessity for a farm shop building."

> Mosquito Bite How does a mosquito bite? First he lights on the victim, places his mouth, which is a hollow tube about three-eighths of an inch long, on the skin. The stinger, a raspy drill partly covering the outside of the mouth, sinks swiftly, penetrating the skin. The mosquito starts his feast of blood. The irritation of a bite is caused by the mosquito's saliva, deposited in the wound to prevent the blood clotting in the insect's tubelike mouth.

"But for a matter of a few cents a week, an electric range is worth every bit of the difference! Just think: I enjoy electric cooking for less than the price of a loaf of bread or a quart of milk.

"We have a small family—there are three of us but my neighbor next door cooks for five persons, and HER bill for electric cooking runs about 45c a week. So you see, an electric range costs less than you think. I wish I'd known that long ago . . . I'd have bought my electric range much sooner."

Another electric servant worth "discovering" is the automatic electric water heater. It provides hot water at all hours—and it is so fully automatic you simply install it and forget it. STAVE ONE Marley's Ghost

Marley was dead.

Scrooge knew he was dead? Of course he did. Scrooge and he were partners. Scrooge was his sole executor, his sole friend, and sole mourner. And even Scrooge was not so cut up by the sad event.

There is no doubt that Marley was dead. This must be distinctly understood, or nothing wonderful can come of the story I am going to relate. If we were not perfectly convinced that Hamlet's father died before the play began, there would be nothing more remarkable in his taking a stroll at night.

The firm was known as Scrooge and Marley.

Oh! But he was a tight-fisted hand at the grindstone, Scrooge! a squeezing, wrenching, grasping, scraping, clutching, covetous, old sinner! Once upon a time-on Christmas Eve-old Scrooge sat busy in his counting-house. " "A merry Christmas, uncle! God save you!" cried a cheerful voice. "Bah!" said Scrooge, "Humbug!" "Christmas a humbug, uncle!"

said Scrooge's nephew. "You don't mean that, I am sure?" "I do," said Scrooge. Christmas! What right have you to be merry? You're poor enough." "Come, then," returned the nephew gany. "What right have you to be morose? You're rich enough." Scrooge having no better answer ready on the spur of the moment, said "Bah!" again; and followed it up with: "Keep Christmas in your way, and let me keep it in mine.' "Keep it!" repeated Scrooge's nephew. "But you don't keep it."

"Let me leave it alone, then," said Scrooge. "Much good may it do you!'

"There are many things from which I might have derived good, by which I have not profited, I dare say," returned the nephew. "Christmas among the rest. But I am sure I have always thought of Christmas time, when it has come roundapart from the veneration due to its sacred name and origin, if anything belonging to it can be apart from that—as a good time; a kind, forgiving, charitable, pleasant time: the only time I know of, in the long calendar of the year, when men and women seem by one consent to open their shut-up hearts freely. and to think of people below them as if they really were fellow-passengers to the grave, and not another race of creatures bound on other journeys. And therefore, uncle, though it has never put a scrap of gold or silver in my pocket, I believe that it has done me good and will do me good; and I say, God bless it! Come! Dine with us Scrooge said he would see himyes, indeed he did. He went the whole length of the expression.

"But why?" cried Scrooge's neph-

"Why did you get married?"

"Because I fell in love."

"Because you fell in love!" growled Scrooge. "Good afternoon!" "Nay, uncle, but you never came to see me before that happened. Why give it as a reason for not coming now?'

"Good afternoon," said Scrooge. "I am sorry, with all my heart, to find you so resolute. We have never had any quarrel, to which I have been a party. But I have made the trial in homage to Christmas, and I'll keep my Christmas humour to the last. So A Merry Christmas."

His nephew stopped to bestow the greetings of the season on the clerk. "There's another fellow," muttered Scrooge, who overheard him: "my clerk, with fifteen shillings a week, and a wife and family, talking about a merry Christmas.'

Two portly gentlemen came in. "At this festive season of the year, Mr. Scrooge," said one gentleman, "it is more than usually desirable that we should make some slight provision for the poor and destitute. Many thousands are in want of common necessaries.'

"Are there no prisons?" asked Scrooge.

"Plenty of prisons." "And the Union workhouses?" demanded Scrooge. "Are they still in operation?' "Under the impression that they scarcely furnish Christian cheer of mind or body to the multitude," returned the gentleman, "a few of us are endeavouring to raise a fund to buy the poor some meat and drink, and means of warmth. What can I put you down for?" "Nothing!" Scrooge replied. help to support the establishments I have mentioned - they cost enough; and those who are badly off must go there.' "Many can't go there; and many would rather die." "If they would rather die," said Scrooge, "they had better do it, and decrease the surplus population." Seeing it would be useless to pursue their point, the men withdrew. At length the hour of shutting up the counting-house arrived.

"So a Merry Christmas, Uncle."

"You'll want all day tomorrow, suppose?" said Scrooge. The clerk observed it was only once a year.

"A poor excuse for picking man's pocket," said Scrooge.

Scrooge took his melancholy dinner in his usual melancholy tavern; and having read all the newspapers, went home to bed. Now, it is a fact, that there was nothing at all particular about the knocker on the door, except that it was very large. Let it also be borne in mind that Scrooge had not bestowed one thought on Marley. Then let any man explain how it happened that Scrooge saw in the knocker, not a knocker, but Marley's face.

As Scrooge looked at this phenomenon, it was a knocker again.

To say that he was not startled would be untrue. But he put his hand upon the key he had relinquished, turned it sturdily.

He closed his door and locked himself in; double-locked himself in, which was not his custom, and sat down before the fire to his gruel.

The fireplace was an old one, paved all round with quaint Dutch tiles, designed to illustrate the Scriptures. There were Cains and Abels. Pharaohs' daughters, Queens of Sheba, Apostles putting off to sea in butter-boats, hundreds of figures to attract his thoughts; and yet that face of Marley, seven years dead, came like the ancient Prophet's rod, and swallowed up the whole.

'Humbug!'' said Scrooge. As he threw his head back in the chair, his glance happened to rest upon a disused bell that hung in the room. It was with great astonishment that as he looked, he saw this bell begin to swing.

It was succeeded by a clanking noise, deep down below; as if some person were dragging a heavy chain over the casks in the wine merchant's cellar. Scrooge then remembered to have heard that ghosts in haunted houses were described as dragging chains.

It came on through the heavy door, and passed into the room. The same face: Marley's chain was made of cash-boxes, keys, padlocks, ledgers, deeds, and heavy purses wrought in steel. "You don't believe in me," observed the Ghost.

"I don't," said Scrooge.

"Why do you doubt your senses?" "Because," said Scrooge, "a little thing affects them. A slight disorder of the stomach makes them cheats. You may be an undigested bit of beef, a blot of mustard, a crumb of cheese, a fragment of an underdone potato. There's more of gravy than of grave about you."

At this the spirit raised a frightful cry. Scrooge held tight to his chair, to save himself from falling in a swoon. But how much greater was his horror, when the phantom taking off the bandage round its head, its lower jaw dropped down upon its breast!

Scrooge fell upon his knees.

"Mercy!" he said. "Dreadful apparition, why do you trouble me?" "It is required of every man," the Ghost returned, "that the spirit within him should walk abroad among his fellow-men; and if that spirit goes not forth in life, it is condemned to do so after death. It is doomed to wander through the world-oh, woe is me!-and witness what it cannot share, but might have on earth, and turned to happiness!"

Again the spectre shook its chain. "You are fettered," said Scrooge, trembling. "Tell me why?" "I wear the chain I forged in life," replied the Ghost. "I made it link by link. Is its pattern strange to Scrooge trembled more and more. "Or would you know," pursued the Ghost, "the weight and length of the strong coil you bear yourself? It was full as heavy and as long as this, seven Christmas Eves ago. You have laboured on it, since. It is a ponderous chain!"

Scrooge glanced about him on the floor, in the expectation of finding himself surrounded by some fifty or sixty fathoms of iron cable.

"At this time of the rolling year," the spectre said, "I suffer most. Why did I walk through crowds of fellow-beings with my eyes turned down, and never raise them to that blessed Star which led the Wise Men to a poor abode! Were there no poor homes to which its light would have conducted me!"

Scrooge was very much dismayed. "Hear me!" cried the Ghost. "My time is nearly gone."

"I will," said Scrooge. "But don't be hard upon me!"

"How it is that I appear before you in a shape that you can see, I may not tell. I have sat invisible beside you many and many a day. I am here tonight to warn you, that you have yet a chance and hope of escaping my fate. You will be haunted by Three Spirits."

Scrooge's countenance fell. "Without their visits," said the Ghost, "you cannot hope to shun the path I tread. Expect the first tomorrow, when the bell tolls One." "Couldn't I take 'em all at once, and have it over?" hinted Scrooge. "Expect the second on the next night at the same hour. The third upon the next night when the last stroke of Twelve has ceased to vibrate. Look to see me no more." When it had said these words, the spectre walked backward from kim; dow raised itself a little.

After listening for a moment, it floated out upon the bleak night. Scrooge closed the window, and examined the door by which the Ghost had entered. It was doublelocked, as he had locked it and the bolts were undisturbed. He tried to say "Humbug!" but stopped at the first syllable.

When Scrooge awoke, it was dark. Church chimes struck twelve. "Why, it isn't possible," said "that I can have slept through a whole day and far into another night. It isn't possible that anything has happened to the sun, and this is twelve at noon!" He remembered, on a sudden, that the Ghost had warned him of a visitation when the bell tolled one. "Ding, dong!"

"The hour itself," said Scrooge, triumphantly, "and nothing else!" He spoke before the hour bell sounded, which it now did with a deep, dull, hollow, melancholy One. Light flashed up in the room upon the instant, and the curtains of his bed were drawn.

The curtains of his bed were drawn aside, I tell you, by a hand. Scrooge, starting up into a halfrecumbent attitude, found himself face to face with the unearthly visitor who drew them.

It was a strange figure—like a child: yet not so like a child as like an old man. Its hair was white as if with age; and yet the face had not a wrinkle in it, and the tenderest bloom was on the skin. But the strangest thing about it was, that from the crown of its head there sprung a bright clear jet of light. "I am the Ghost of Christmas Past," it said. "Long Past?" inquired Scrooge:

observant of its dwarfish stature. "No. Your past." Scrooge then made bold to inquire what business brought him.

"Your welfare!" said the Ghost. It put out its strong hand as it spoke, and clasped him gently by the arm. "Rise! and walk with me!"

The grasp, though gentle as a woman's hand, was not to be resisted. He rose: but finding that the Spirit made towards the window, clasped his robe in supplication. "I am a mortal," Scrooge remon-
