

The Sorghies Meet The Candy Bear

Copyright, 1901, by Caroline Wetherell

"The Sorghies are the queerest folks!" I'm sure I hear you say. Indeed they are, my children dear, in many a different way. These funny creatures, so I'm told, in Sugarville reside. Where only elves just like themselves in china bowls abide. Their sweetness none can fail to note. From center unto crust Of snowy sugar are they made instead, like us, of dust; Their bodies, for their limbs, are large and serve for heads as well; Their legs are short, and these, alas, are seldom parallel! Their active arms are slender, too, and, for their bodies, long; Their heads, though crystals, are not clear and very far from strong. Their dispositions are quite good, their faults are very few, Especially the merry three, Sam, Sol and Sister Sue. These are the life of Sugarville; their antics please the town

Because of their persistency in hunting mischief down. One day the three went out to walk. They met a candy bear, And shrieked, "The beast will eat us up!" Said he: "I should not dare; My nice complexion you would spoil. It now is smooth and clear, But food so sandy and opaque, I very greatly fear, Would cause me indigestion and my beauty all destroy. That would a sad disaster be and much my friends annoy." Just then they came to Honey creek. The bear, too, waded in. He landed at the other side, a humble bear and thin. The Sorghies said: "Now come with us. We'll make you plump and round." They rolled him where the sugar strewed like shining sand the ground, And then he was a sight to see, so clumsy, rough and white. He dug a den in Sugar hill and only prowled by night.

Birds Plant Trees.

An old time Arizona woodchopper says the blue jays have planted thousands of the trees now growing all over Arizona. He says these birds have a habit of burying small seeds in the ground with their beaks and that they frequent pine trees and bury large numbers of the small pine nuts in the ground, many of which sprout and grow. He was walking through the pines with an eastern man a short time ago, when one of these birds flew from a tree to the ground, stuck his bill into the earth and quickly flew away. When told what had happened the eastern man was skeptical, but the two went to the spot and with a knife blade dug out a sound pine nut from a depth of about an inch and a half. Thus it will be seen that nature has her own plan for forest perpetuation.—Indianapolis News.

West Point Class of 1903.

Ninety-seven members comprised the class of 1903 that graduated from the United States Military academy in June and became second lieutenants in the United States army. Douglas A. MacArthur, son of General MacArthur, youngest general in the United States army, stood at the head of the class. Well toward the top was Ulysses S. Grant, son of General Frederick Grant and grandson of the distinguished general of the civil war.

Cow With a Bark.

Harry was sitting on the fence in front of the house one day watching some cows feeding, when they bellowed very loud and long, as cows do sometimes. Harry had never heard a cow bellow before, and he jumped down and ran into the house to his mother, crying: "Oh, mamma, there's a cow out there barking at another cow!"

WOMEN'S SPEECHES.

Ladies Have Proved That They Can Create With the Best.

The pleasing murmur of the women's clubs is silenced officially for the summer. While the members are meditating new coups one may glance over the net result of their past work in one particular—their progress in the art of oratory and eloquence. When first women's clubs were instituted it was feared the fair girls, old and young, could never learn or observe parliamentary usage. When a lady in the beginning of feminine clubdom arose to address Madam President it was with a flutter, a twitter and a gasp and a gulp in her throat, and she once in awhile choked up at half a dozen words, sat down, covered her face with her hands and burst into tears at essaying her maiden speech. I have seen a lady do that.

Would women ever learn to talk in public?

Time and clubs went on. Women did learn parliamentary usage so thoroughly and practice it so strenuously that today the leading teachers and trainers of that branch of education the country over are of the feminine sex.

Learn to talk in public? Well, club women began practicing that, too, and became such mahatmic adepts at it that at length it seems they never do anything else than talk. Undoubtedly the ladies have found their tongues in public.

A cynical rabbinical legend records that when Eve was packing her trunks to leave the garden of Eden just the last thing before she passed through the gate she ran to the great tree of Gable and under it gathered up twelve basketfuls of talk and brought them away with her. She saved some of the seed and planted it, and that spread the trees all over. Thus one of her blessings at least Eve brought from her lost Edenic state, and that was the right of talkee-talkie. Her daughters, the club women, let not this blessing wane for want of use.

It is on record that one ladies' organization set out to improve the condition of poor girls by establishing an institution where they might learn trades. Their efforts extended over a number of years. In 1900 the president gave an account of progress before the society, and her address began:

"Unfortunately, our school for girls still remains an unaccomplished fact." "Three years have passed since then and the school for girls 'still remains an unaccomplished fact.' But the conventions, the love feasts and, above all, the elections the dear ladies have enjoyed since then! The motions they have moved, the speeches they have spoken! At one meeting the solemn question is discussed, 'Does woman lose her womanliness by entering a business career?'"

Miss Cleverton regrets painfully to say it does. Miss Botherton declares flatly it is no such thing that woman

ORGAN BUILDING A Pleasant Occupation For Women

IN the United States a woman builder of church organs would be a great novelty. In England, however, such women are not so rare. The skilled worker in the craft gets $10 a week, which is large wages for Great Britain. Here the pay would be much greater. Why American women have never tried it one cannot understand, for the work is not difficult.

In England the organ builder's trade is apt to run in families and be handed down from father to son or, as in the case of Miss Wedlake, well known in London, from father to daughter. Mr. Wedlake was a famous British artificer of church organs. He had a large factory of his own. His daughter desired to learn his handicraft. He decided to have her do so. She could not be apprenticed regularly because, being a woman, the sky would have fallen had she been article like a boy. But, being a woman, she also had an eye, an ear, a touch and an adaptability to the work of organ building that not one boy in a thousand possesses. There was no law to prevent her learning the business as a rank outsider. Her father was a man liberal far beyond his time on the woman question. He himself taught her and took a fine pride in her progress.

Like a boy, she went into the factory and learned the trade from the ground up. It is a delicate, beautiful work, thoroughly healthful, artistic enough to be inspiring and satisfying.

Since she learned her trade Miss Wedlake has been constantly busy. She has the woman's natural quickness of eye, and long practice has made her accuracy absolutely unerring. Her work is chiefly the construction of bellows and the ornamentation of pipes. The blocks of wood for the bellows come already prepared. Then Miss Wedlake leathers and gussets them together. Pieces of white kid are cut exactly to fit and carefully adjusted to the wood by hand. There must be no looseness of execution here, for it would ruin all. In one of the large churches of London—St. Jude's, South Kensington—Miss Wedlake did all the leathering of the main bellows. In connection with organ bellows work Miss Wedlake's father invented and patented an ingenious piece of mechanism, which won him the medal at an exposition, but his daughter did the work of making the thing. She herself is inventive and has patented, among other devices, a stove that can be taken apart and cleaned and put together again by the most ignorant of women.

After she has constructed the bellows of her organ Miss Wedlake proceeds to decorate the pipes. In this department she rises to the artistic. She devises first a scheme of ornamentation suited to the subject. The theme is usually of an ecclesiastical or Biblical nature. Then she lays the figures deftly upon the pipes. Miss Wedlake's accomplishments, however, by no means stop at bellows making and adjusting and pipe ornamentation. She can take to pieces any organ in the world, clean and repair it and set it up again bit by bit. Then she finishes by tuning it.

There is another department in organ construction which requires the most sensitive touch, ear and nerves that belong to human being. This is the "voicing" of the organ. Here, too, woman has excelled. Some years ago there was in England a family of organ builders named Abbey. A daughter of the house became the most skilled of the race in the family trade. This lady, Miss Abbey, chose France as the field of her labors. She went thither and settled and began building at once organs and a business. So skillful was she that in this particular task of voicing an organ she became the marvel of the Frenchmen who were in the same field.

An expert authority sets forth the following qualifications for the organ maker: "A delicate and sensitive musical ear, physique sufficiently strong to lift the less heavy pipes, some simple, cheap tools and about as much skill in their use as is required in very modest wood carving are the equipment necessary to start with in an organ builder's factory. The most difficult and highly paid branch of this industry is reed voicing, not the reeds of harmoniums, but of real organs. This is tedious to learn and takes years to master thoroughly."
