Grand Lodgo F. & A. M. The 49th annual convocation of the Grand lodge of Michigan, F. & A. M. was held in Saginaw with over 600 delegates present. Grand Master W. P. Innis, of Grand Rapids, presided. The address of the grand master shows that during the year dispensations were granted to five new lodges, and the charter of one lodge was revoked. Twelve new Masonic halls were dedicated and the corner stones of seven new public buildings laid. The Masonic Home at Grand Rapids was warmly commended and the Grand Lodge advised to take some action for its support. The grand secretary's report shows the total membership is 34,241, with three lodges to recent cold snap. hear from, the gain during the year being 1,143. There are 367 chartered lodges in the state with seven working under dispensations.

Small-Pox in Michigan.

Michigan and several other states may suffer a small-pox epidemic because of the lax regulations of the New York quarantine. Secretary Baker, of the state board of health has been notified of seven cases and one death from the dread disease in Washtenaw county, near Ann Arbor. The victims Shepherd, fell into a boiler of scalding are all in the family of Henry Schneiwater with fatal results. She was der. They contracted the disease from about 4 years old. immigrants by the name of Jacer, who arrived in New York Nov. 23 on the infected steamer Saale. They had certificates from the New York officials, which were presented at Ann Arbor about three days later. Several members of the Jacer family have since broken out with varioloid, and from them the Schneiders contracted what is known as confluent small-pox. Two more of the cases in that family may prove fatal.

It has been learned that the New York authorities paid no attention to any passengers except those who were actually sick, and, as a result, contag-ion has been spread far and wide. In Ohio several outbreaks of small-pox have just been reported which can be attributed to the same source.

Diphtheria's Awful Ravages.

A sad case of diphtheria's ravages came to light at Saginaw when Officer Halsey called at a house which had been placarded on account of the illness of a little girl with the disease. He found that the husband and father, Robert Armstrong, had been suddenly taken down with the disease and died, the girl was no better and the mother was just about to be taken down with the disease. The committee then issued a manifesto abrogating the Hawaiian monarchial system of government and declaring a "provisional government for the control and management of public affairs and the protection of public peace is hereby established, to exist until terms of union with the United States of America have been negotiated and agreed upon."

The provisional government was fully organized as soon as possible and the queen, seeing her troops and followers rapidly joining the volunteers called for by the new government, decided to abdicate and then retired to her private home, leaving the provisional government in full control.

Bishop Phillips Brooks died at his residence at Boston, of heart failure induced by a fit of coughing. The demise was entirely unexpected, the bishop having been only slightly ill with pneumonia and only for a few days previous.

Phillips Brooks was born in Boston Dec. 13, 1835, and graduated from Harvard 20 years later. His theological education was secured at the seminary at Alexandaia, Va., and in 1859 he was ordained, his first charge being the Church of the Advent, in Philadelphia. In 1862 he took the Church of the Holy Trinity in the same city and in 1869 went to Trinity church in Boston. Mr Brooks was noted for his low church views, his commanding mated expenditures at $457,261,335, or physical presence, his power for good especially among young men, and for especially among young men, and for the extraordinarily rapid delivery of his speech when preaching. He de-clined many calls, including a professorship at Harvard and the office of assistant bishop of Pennsylvania, and until his appointment as the bishop of Massachusetts he preferred to remain with his Boston parish.

130 MINERS KILLED

An Explosion of Fire Damp in a Bohemian Mine Causes Fearful Staughter,

Dispatches from Vienna tell the story of the terrible loss of life from an explosion of fire damp in a mine at Dux in Bohemia. One hundred and thirty miners were killed.

The explosion occurred when the shifts were changing. A cage full of miners had been lowered half way down the shaft when the ground trem-bled, a loud rumbling report was heard and the cable attached to the cage gave such a lurch that the lowering machinery broke. A rush of air and dust from the pit's mouth, the sounds of crashing timbers and the cries of the men in the cage gave warning to the men above of the extent of the disaster. Help was summoned, the machinery was repaired after a delay of half an hour and the cage was raised. Ten of the occupants had been killed instantly by the shock, 10 had suffered fractures from which they cannot recover, 5 who had broken limbs and internal injuries will live. An hour later the superintendent of the mine and five miners from the night shift went down in the cage. They were unable to go more than 100 yards from the shaft but they found 14 dead bodies. Of the 50 men, who were waiting for the cage, 10 had been killed and 40 had been partially crushed by falling timbers or half suffocated by the foul air. A short distance from the shaft the superintendent found four bodies which had been crushed by a falling beam. In a gallery 300 yards from the mouth of the shaft 40 bodies were found under an immense pile of fallen timber and Manager Hobbs says carclessness in mixing the ingredients which make up the dynamite caused the explosion. No one was near except the two men who were killed. After the explosion, men with baskets gathered up the flesh and bones of the dead men. The largest pieces found were part of an arm and a section of a man's spinal column. In the top of a tall tree was found a pair of pants. Fragments of flesh were found across a creek 300 yards away, and the shock of the explosion caused an immense boulder to roll down on the Birmingham Mineral raiload track, half a mile away, delaying trains an hour.

WEEKLY TRADE REVIEW. NEW YORK, Jan. 30.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: There has been some increase in the distribution of products during the past week, and the domand for manufactured goods is distinctly larger, so that business has perceptibly improved at many points. Yet the outgo of gold expected to exceed $3.00,00 bte past week, reduces the treasury reserves, causes increased nervousness about the future, and renders men more reluctant to engage in the new undertakings. The liquidation of some great speculations has set free large amounts, so that money is everywhere comparatively easy and cheap, and nevertheless there is more sense of uncortainty about the future than appeared a month ago. Speculation grows less active, many large operations having been closed out. Wheat is a fraction lower in price, with moderate sales. Corn and pork products are a shade higher, but oats &c lower. Coffee is a quarter higher with moderate sales, and oil &c lower. Cotton did not change in price. The outgo of gold is attributed to various foreign requirements, but there is still an excess of merchandise exports over imports for January. The business failures occurring throughout the country during the past seven days number 295. For the the past seven days number 295. For the corresponding week of last year the figures were 297.

There are some bad boys and some bad girls at Ionia, and they have been going at a rather hot pace for young-sters. Frank King, a bell boy at the Bailey house, and a chum have made the telephone office very attractive evenings to young girls, and the numper going there has caused comment. Now King is under arrest, charged with criminally assaulting Flossie Ward, aged 13, in a bedroom adjoining. Her mother swears out the warrant. King swears liberties were taken with the girl's consent, and that he believed her to be more than 13 years of age.

ANNIE HAMILTON DONNELL.

A Boy and His Bank. The most celebrated bank in the world is the Bank of England. It is the national bank of the Queen's dominions, and more business than one can calculate flows through it every "As safe as the Bank of England" is a proverb which is spoken of the world over, and one seeking a glimpse of this great institution is directed to the heart of London, where he is shown "The Old Lady of Threadneedle Street," as the bank is sometimes termed.

Most strange to write, the origin of the Bank of England is due to the forethought of a boy, who became connected with it in after life. But for the genius of William Patterson, a boy who played on the hills of his native Dumfriesshire, the people of England might have waited much longer than they did for the establishment of the monster bank which does more business than any other financial institution in the world.

Dumfriesshire is a border county of Scotland, and one noted for its sheep farms. Hundreds of its men flocked to marshaled them to beat back the invading soldiers of King Edward, and some of the Pattersons from whom William was descended fought bravely with King Robert on the field of Bannockburn, where he achieved liberty for his native country.

The Pattersons being poor, the future founder of the Bank of England grew up like the other lads by whom he was surrounded, and with them tended sheep on the high hills of Dumfriesshire; but all the time William's young brain was full of schemes at which his elders smiled when he unfolded them. He was growing up during troublous times, for Scotland was rent by one of those fierce border wars which almost fill the history of the country. One of his ambitions was attained when he went to the University of Glasgow, and here his mind broadened, and he realized that he was about to step forth in the world at a period when the brains of the best thinkers in Scotland would be needed. The young scholar turned for a moment to pursuits which he thought would give him a living, but just then he was turned aside from these by the hot persecution which the Covenanters were undergoing. He belonged to the prescribed faith, and so outspoken was he that in a short time he fell under suspicion, and had to flee for his life.

if he had kept silent, but such was not the Patterson manner of living one's faith. William spoke out against the persecution, and the enemies of the lates at this point. Covenanters reported him to the King, and at night he was compelled to flee, which he did, and took refuge in England under the roof of a relative.

All the time his head was full of financial schemes and the project of forming a greal national bank took root. It was a new scheme those times. The King stood in need of an institution of the kind, for at times the government was sore pressed for money; but of all who listened to the young scholar of Glasgow, not one had the courage to follow his suggestions nor carry his schemes to the proper authorities.

William Patterson despaired at last of getting his plans adopted, though he believed that some day they would be taken up, and, finally, with some money left him by a relative, he embarked in business, going to the West Indies, where he tried to carry out another of his schemes, the establishment of a colony on the Isthmus of Darien.

His residence in that part of the world was neither profitable nor pleasant, and, after a short season there, he returned to London loaded with books and maps and all sorts of information.

The Bank of England was still his hobby, and, not finding the country ready to listen to him, he went to Holland, where he settled among the Dutch, who gave him some more information about money affairs, and whom he instructed in his plans.

The sturdy Dutch taught him how to put some of his schemes into operation, and when he turned his face once more towards England, it was with the determination to openly propose the Bank of England, and to push his plans before the throne if necessary. If at any time during all these years of ups and downs the boy of courage, ne would have failed in the end, and his name would not be known to-day in his native country.

For three years, with the persistence Dumfriesshire laid his plans before all __Princeton Clarion.

who would listen, but at the same time he took care that they should reach the ears of King William.

The King saw that he had to have money to carry on the wars in which he was engaged, and at last he turned to Patterson and his plans for a national bank. He asked him to sketch out the scheme, which was gladly done, and then the royal ear inclined to the

It was in 1694 that Patterson laid the final plan before the King, and at last achieved the great triumph of his life the one which he originated while watching the herds on the hills of Scot-

You may be sure it was a happy day for the boy of Dumfriesshire when he saw the Bank of England established and himself one of the directors of it All his ambition seemed satisfied now but he turned back to his colony on the Isthmus of Darien, and tried to interest the English Government in it. Although he had given the country a bank which was to become famous the world over, no one listened to his Darien scheme, and he went over to Scotland to get help there.

He was more successful in his native country; but the colony turned out a failure, and, broken in health and purse, the founder came home.

It was feared now that England had forgotten William Patterson: but, when that country and Scotland were united, he was chosen to adjust the financial and commercial relations between them, a very difficult task, but one which he carried through with

The whole career of the Dumfriesshire boy was one of honor. During the reign of Queen Anne he was awarded a great sum of money to indemnify him for his losses in the Darien scheme, and this helped to brighten his old age; for at the time of the grant he was almost in want, while in the vast vau ts of the great bank which his genius had brought into existence were heaps of gold and silver belonging to the government.

To-day the Bank of Engla d is the most wonderful institution of the kina in existence. Its money is good whereever it is found, and without it the financial standing of Queen Victoria's realm would totter. Few know that it sprang from the fertile brain of a boy who watched his father's sheep on the hills of Dumfriesshire; but while the name of its tounder is almost forthe armies of Robert Bruce when he gotten, the Bank of England stands a monument to him, his industry and his genius. - Golden Days.

Social Line in Washington. Very much has always been said of the refinement of what may distinc tively be called the "old families of Washington," writes Madeleine Vinton Dahlgren in the Ladies' Home Journal. Before the war this element was almost entirely Southern, and if not composed exclusively of Southerners, yet the cherished sentiment of the South prevailed, and those who did not subscribe implicitly to this creed were proscribed. At that time the social line in Washington ran along very near to Mason and Dixon's line. This state of things exerted a very potent and dangerous influence during the progress of the war, when the nation was battling for its very life, and it is astonishing with what vitality it has survived its environments, for there still exists a somewhat romantic tinge Paying the Soldiers. Gen. J. N. Patterson, Second Auditor. in his annual report to Secretary of the Treasury devotes considerable space to a consideration of the question of paying soldiers who served during the war of the rebellion, or their widows or legal heirs, the difference between paper currency and gold. The amount required is $144,922,500, which amount would be swelled to $200,000,000, provided commissioned officers were also paid on the gold The General says that the present indications are that the balance on hand for the payment of claims for back pay and bounty will be exhausted long before the close of

A football game was going at full blast. All the seats on both sides of the field were full, and inside the ropes was a straggling line of white and crimson substitutes, looking like great squatting ducks. At the moment when my story begins every one in the tiers of seats had risen hastily to his feet and was vigorously clapping and stamping, as he strained his eyes to follow the Harvard back that sprinted with the ball through the dusty glare. Even the substitutes had got up and were running along a ong the edge of the field half doubled up. The bottom row forgot to cry 'Down in front," the crimson reporters wrote all crooked, and in the e citement an invasive small boy escaped from the pursuit of a desultory policeman.

While the interest was thus at its height, a sudden lull came in the applause of one section of seats. Some people del berately stopped cheering, others aused to see what could be destracting attention from such football; all telt repaid for their momentary abstraction. The two women that had caused this stir of silence walked slowly before the spectators. One of them was such a person as we read about, and sometimes see. Tall, largely and well-formed, and gracefully dignified, she wore a well fitting fashionable gown which was triking in cut and color while it escaped being loud. All the correct appendages of hat, gloves and wrap she had in the latest style. Her face was pleasant and intelligent, and if there was a touch of rouge and of powder it was applied with so practiced a hand as to escape notice. She did not look her 0 years. The other woman was dressed with equal taste, and more plainly, and looked older than to e first one. Evident y she was a maid or companion.

By the time the two had found seats the touchdown was made. Everybody was sitting, and as the goal was kicked the flame of applause went out in a quick blaze of sound. Then every one was leaning forward to look at the strange arrivals, where they sat apparently unconscious of the effect of their appearan e.

Henri Sherwood, a freshman, who sat behind them, spoke timidly to a sophomore that he d d not know: ..Will you please tell me who she

The sophomore half turned his head and said in a low, supercilious tone, .. Why! Madame avarra. The freshman knew the name. had read it in the papers on the fences, and had heard it everywhere. It was a popular name of a successful woman, one of the few women of the day that had enough mind and soul to play Shakespeare. He looked at

Soon after this the first half was over. People got up and went down on the ground and walked about. Henri Sherwood stepped down from his place and stood for a moment looking about him. Some one touched him on the shoulder and said:

her keenly and decided to see her act

· Hello, Henry Eherwood." The two fellows moved off together. and Sherwood did not see the qui k, wondering glance that Madame Savarra gave him as he mi ed with the crowd, although he had been staring at her a minute before. She spoke in a low tone to her compan on, and the two women walked a little way among the people but they soon reseated themselves and waited for the se ond half. Sherwood did not see them again during the game.

There is however, no doubt that they saw him, for at about six that evening Dick Roberts went into henri's room and began ·Say do you know Henri, that Savarra was talking about you? 1 heard her say to the other one, . herwood; yes, I'm sure it was Henri Sherwood.' She talks with a k nd of an accent. And then she caught s ght of you and pointed you out and got as e cited as the devil. Do any of your olks know her?'

Dick," said Henri, striving hard to be calm, but trembling. "I should t ink there is something up. That woman is my mother."

·Mother! Savarra?" I believe that for a minute Dick thought that Henri was out of his senses for he could see that there was no joke, but Henrisson convinced him of the truth of waat he said. He showed hm a note from Madame Savarra that he had found in his room after the game, and he told him the story of his parents. It is too common a story to be romantic-that of the married pair that cannot love, cannot even endure each other longer. so that some plea is found and the bond is dissolved. In this case there were unique points; the wife had been a young French woman, beautiful and accomplished, but ine perienced her only child had been taken from her, she had departed from an inhospitable land, but where she had gone no one had cared to know. Henri could not remember his mother. but he had clung superstitiously to the name she had given him, and would never English its spelling, which was all he could do to show an inborn love for an unknown parent. His father had died years ago, and and his uncles.

now excitedty recounted the main points. He was a fellow with some romance, and had been silently used to worship his mother, as he vaguely imagined her to be; but this vary romance had heretofore disinclined him to speak of its effects. Now however, he surely had no reason to be reticent. The mother was found. Joy at the idea opened his heart and his mouth and he poured out to his friend his happiness and his pride. He gave Robert the note to read. and watched him with an unconquerable smile of delight while he read it. The diction was not of cold formality that a woman naturally uses in writing to a strange young man. The English was good, but had one or two European turns of expression, and the warmth of the style also seemed rather exotic. Although the language was involved the note certainly presaged a joyful reunion of long sundered ties; but this was not put in so poetical a form as to cause the request that came last to be an anti-clima . Madam Savarra wished Sherwood to call the next afternoon at the hotel Vendome.

When Koberts finished reading, he he said. Well, let me congratulate you, old man. You ought to be a happy fellow."

Henri answered, "There are not many women on the stage a man could take for a mother and be proud

The next day Henri went to the Vendome and was taken to Madam Savarra's private parlor and told to wait a few minutes. He sat during these minutes in a state of tremulous e citement, trying to be calm, and yet asking himself why he should be He was there to be restored to his mother, from whom he had been parted for years, and whom he loved with an innate love; and this mother was a woman admired and almost adored by thousands, a woman renowned for her beauty, her intellect, and her virtue.

The door opened, and as Sherwood arose Madam Savarra entered with an odor of violets. He had vaguely expected to throw himself into her wide-open arms but such a course seemed highly inappropriate now, as the ma e tic figure advanced in her robe of swaying white; so Henri stood and held the arm of his chair, as she smiled graciously and slowly spoke in her sympathetic effective voice: ·Henri Sherwood. Will you please to be seated?" However, they both remained standing, and she immediately went on, calmly but giving no chance for reply. "You of course know why I sent for you?

She had a distinctly foreign accent, and spoke with vigor and attention to point, as though she were giving some telling speech before a large audience; and occasionally she used a quiet, well-chosen gesture.

"The une pected recognition of esterday afternoon, and also this meeting of to-day gives me the greatest pleasure. It is not often that I have been interested in any event; and this is not only on account of the undivided happiness that such a joyous reunion must allord to even an unaffected observer, but equally because I am for so long aware of the merit of that worthy soul to whom this meeting gives already the most immense delight. To me that knows how long and earnestly the mother has hoped and prayed to see her dear child aga n-and tois I know as no one else can-it is like an answer to the prayer. To you, who have your splendid feelings of the youth, it will not be needful to say anything in praise of that dear parent but I can not meet you without telling you how I appreciate her true value which you yet have to learn. She is the faithfulest, the most trustable of women and the most patient. For all of these years Madame Sherwood is my most beloved friend; and I have never regarded her position as in the least menial, for she has been to me more as a sister than as a companion. And so I can share her hay piness of regaining you. All this time sir your poor mother is waiting for me to bring her to you."

With a charming sm le Madame Savarra turned and walked malestically to the door, while Henri Sherwood clung to the arm of the chair .-Louis How. in the Harvard Advocate.

Captain Kidd's Treasures.

The only place where any of the treasures of the famous pirate, Captain Aidd, were ever found is Gardiner's island, at the east end of Long Island, a famous rendezvous for sea robbers. Here were found 783 ounces of gold, 633 ounces of silver, besides silk, satin, bullion and jewels. But the places where Kidd may have concealed such of his wealth as he and his mates did not dring up include Lion's lock, at Lyme, Conn.; Monhegan Island, Me.; Appledore, in the Isles of Shoals; Cro' Nest. on the Hudson; Money Hill, on Shark river, N. J.; Sandy Hook; Kidd's tree on the Atlantic Highlands, of New Jersey Damariscotta island, Me.: a place on the Piscatagua river: Oyster Point Md.; Dighton Rock, Mass.; Medford, Mass.; Salem Mass.: Liberty ısland, New York harbor, and the east side of Manhattan island in the neighborhood of One Hundredth street. Enough time and money have been fooled away in the search for money at these places to establish many men in business. Most of the spots were until recently regarded as uncanny, for it was alleged of Kidd that whenever he buried money he killed a sailor to bury with it, that his ghost might guard the treasure and scare away intruders.

the human nature, which is as strong in Presidents as in any other people, would permit any president to retire leaving such a vacancy, even if his successor had been elected by his own party, to say nothing of leaving it to the man who has defeated him. There is much talk around the Capitol about a big row being raised over the confirmation of any nomination that Mr. Harrison, may make to this vacancy, but from the best obtainable information the republican Senetors will vote solidly for the confirmation of any man that may be chosen, and the populist Senators will probably vote with them, which would make the confirmation certain, even it every democratic Senator opposed it, which is not considered probable. Certain republican Senators are probably willing for Mr. Harrison to believe that they will not be active in securing the confirmation of a nomination not personally agreeable to them, but that is because they wish to have a hand in selecting the new Justice.

We would like a little holy contention occasionly, but don't just like to bounce a man before we know his age, color of hair, avoirdupois and na tionality.

Are you looking for perfection in your fellow being? If so, you are sure to be disappointed. Yet, we fail to fiind total depravity—there is something good in all. Have we not all our vices and our virtues? Most surely we have, and if the bad qualties don't greatly out number the good, don't call him a bad fellow; and if the good points are as many as the bad then the book is balanced and we must admit him to be a good one. Tis so hard to do right and so easy to do wrong.

THE theory that the Garden of Eden is at the North pole is the inspiration of a would-be explorer of the Arctic. Practical men will see little of value in this theory. Besides this the former tenants, having every advantage, never made anything out of it. The realty to appeal to the great public heart of to-day must be closer to market.

N the Chicago Herald recently appeared a list of the people known to have lost their lives at the Chicago grade crossings during the past year. It is a fearful record of shameless slaughter for greed. It means that 326 human beings were crushed to death under car wheels during the twelve months just ended, that many families were left without support, and that untold suffering was inflicted upon citizens of Chicago. The list is a disgrace to a civilized community. It is a brutal, atrocious, savage list. Its frightful effects reach out to all parts of the city and blight hearts every where.

WHILE death in itself has terrors enough for the ordinary individual, the dread of being possibly entombed while in a trance is one of the most pronounced fears of a very large portion of people. Medical science has advanced to that stage where certain and simple tests for death are known, but these are unfortunately not always applied, even in cases where there is reason to suspect that the last spark of life has not fled. To avert all possibilities of this kind the highest medical talent should be called upon to prescribe some infallible method of ascertaining the complete extinction of life, and all physicians should be compelled by law to apply it and make the fact of its application a part of the death certificate.

JAMES G. BLAINE DEAD.

THE GREAT MAINE STATESMAN AT LAST SUCCUMBS

To the Disease Which had Been Wearing His Life Away for Months .--- A Sketch of the Life of the Greatest Statesman of Recent Days.

After having been in an unconscious condition for over a week with very little change in his condition Mr. Blaine suffered a sudden relapse early on the morning of January 27 and gradually grew weaker until the end of his sufferings came at a few seconds after 10:05 o'clock.

James Gillespie Blaine was born at Indian Hill farm, near West Brownville, Pa., on Jan. 31, 1830. His grandfather was Col. Ephriam Blaine, one of the most dashing patriots of the Revolutionary war. The father of James G. Blaine was also named Ephraim Blaine, but his life was that of a quiet, well-todo farmer and for years a justice of the peace and always an honored citizen. He married Miss Gillespie, the daughter of an Irish Revolutionary patriot.

When seven years of age young Blaine began to attend the village school. Later on he attended school at Washington, Pa. His aptness soon resulted in his being sent to the High school at Lancaster. He remained at school only two years, by which time his extroardinary progress in his studies enabled him to pass the matriculation examination to Washington College in his native county, from which abode of learning he graduated in 1847, being less than 18 years old. His masters at college reported that he had 'been at all times an exceptionally diligent student, naturally unusually gifted, it is true, but always supplementing his inborn talents by hard and unremitting study. He showed the greatest proficiency in all branches of mathematical study, and even more especially in political economy and logic, and it is easy to trace the influence of the latter two studies through his political career. The immediate result of this early diligence and application was that he graduated sharing the honors. of the occasion with only one other student. The oration which he delivered at the commencement exercises was entitled "The Duty of an Educated American" and in its pages it was easy to see that the youth felt the duties of citizenship to be no mere sinecure, a fact which in his case was well proved by subsequent events. After leaving college in spite of his youth Mr. Blaine was engaged as a teacher at the Western Military Institute at Blue Lick, Kentucky, where he remained for about three years and proved himself to be of great value both as a pedagogue and a disciplinarian. During his stay there he made the acquaintance of Miss Harriet Starwood of Maine, who had been sent to the seminary at Millersburg, Ky., for an education, and the acquaintance resulted in marriage.

Mr. Blaine then returned to his native state and began to study for the bar, but did not apply for admission. From 1852 to 1854 he was instructor in the Pennsylvania institution for educating the blind. In 1855 he purchased a half interest in the Kennebec, Maine, Journal and took up his residence in that place. The young journalist took hold of his new work with a will and his paper soon became a power in local politics. In order to be thoroughly conversant with his work Mr. THE case of the disabled steamer Blaine took the files of the Journal

At 25 he was the leading power in the councils of the Republican party ONE of the judges recently appointed in the State. Before he was 29 he was in Maine, and from which he has pracleading his party to brilliant victory. With a view of occupying a wider field of influence, Mr. Blaine, afterwards, purchased the Portland Advertiser. He soon became associated with the Morrills, Fessenden and Hannibal Hamlin, which, added to his measure for his rapid career.

Mr. Blaine had also began to push influence into the formation of the national Republican politics. He was a delegate to the first convention in 1856, which nomi-Presidency, indeed he took an exceptionally active part in the deliberations of this convention, being one of its secretaries.

He stumped the State of Maine for Fremont in a manner that surprised the followers of "the Pathfinder." Then, as in after years, his service to his party was free, even to the amount of his traveling expenses.

The first public office ever held by Mr. Blaine was that of Commissioner of State Prisons and Reformatories. was appointed by Gov. Lot Morrill, who had been reading Editor Blaine's articles on the same subject in the Advertiser. Mr. Blaine accepted the trust unhesitatingly and began to prosecute the study of criminality and the best methods of dealing with it, with the same thoroughness which heretofore characterized all his public and private occupations and movements.

Soon afterward, he was elected to the Maine Legislature, in which deliberative body he sat for the years of '59, '60, '61 and '62, being Speaker of the House the latter two years. During this early period of public life he displayed the most remarkable skill and ability as a parliamentarian and his keen logic and generally brilliant methods of conducting debates made him the observed of all observers in the State political ranks. In '62 he was elected as a member of Congress and he remained a member of that body until he was called from the Senate where he was still serving his first term, to take the place of Secretary of State under Garfield in 1881. As a member of the nation's highest parliamentary body he immediately acquired a reputation second to none as keen logician and brilliant debater.

BLAINE'S BIRTHPLACE.

From a photograph taken about a year ago He was Speaker of the Forty-first and Forty-second Congresses, and was equally successful as a presiding officer. He was one of the foremost in sustaining all the measures of prosecuting the great civil war, as he was also widely connected with the various plans for reconstructing the nation which followed the long desired peace. Indeed the Fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States is practically an embodiment of the views concerning its subject matter which Mr. Blaine offered to the House for their consideration. Shortly after this event he made a terrific protest against the plan to pay the national debt in "greenbacks" and under his effective leadership this bill was defeated. The earliest instance of that "jingoism" which has so often been thrown up against him was in connection with the Costello case in New York in 1865, when he vigorously maintained and urged upon the country the thoroughly novel doctrine that every naturalized American citizen was entitled to the same protection abroad that would be given to the native-born American, and the lengthy discussion of this matter eventually ended with our treaty with Great Britain in 1870. by which this principle was given practical effect as opposed to the older English theory of "once a subject, always a subject."

It was in 1876 that Blaine first made his appearance as a candidate for the Republican nomination for the Presidency. Then, as in every subsequent national convention, he was the popular choice of the people. There he forever crushed Roscoe Conkling, his principal opponent for the nomina-There Col. Ingersoll's famous tion. eulogy was pronounced amid the wildest scenes ever witnessed in a national convention. Yet Blaine was defeated by a combination of all his opponents. The combine was effected by Roscoe Conkling, who seeing the Blaine forces could not be broken, turned his own votes in the direction of Hayes, the dark horse, who was nominated. In the following September Blaine was appointed to succeed Lot M. Morrill in the United States Senate. Heretofore Conkling had been leader of that branch of Congress. With the appearance of Blaine on the floor he was forced to abandon his proud position. The quarrel between Blaine and Conkling was of long standing. Indeed, it dated back to the close of the war, when both were in Congress together and it last until the death of Conklin who had retired to private life after being vanquished at every point for years by Blaine. In the Senate Blaine fought in a most determined manner against the plan for a deteriorated silver coinage, and favored as the solution of this problem a bi-metallic currency. He advocated measures for the protection of American shipping and was to the fore among those who proposed a steamship line between the United States and Brazil with a grant from Congress to provide a subsidy for the enterprise. During four years he took then reentered the contest for the presing the latter's nomination. When statesman.

Garfield was elected portfolio of once tendered the the State Department to Blaine. The friendship between the two had always been strong and deep-rooted and there nated Gen. John C. Fremont for the was no better tribute which could possibly be paid to a defeated but friendly rival than this action upon the part of the newly-elected President. As Secretary of State he stirred up things between this country and England by his position with regard to the Panama Canal and his demand for the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. Even at that period he had plans for a South American policy maurice, the daughter of the Marquis which only partially reached completion when his more recent "reciprocity" schemes went into effect. His original Cavendish but the London dailes desire was to effect a confederation between all the Republics of North, Central and South America under the protecting wing of the United States With a view to securing this end he called a congress of nations to be held in the case of the wives of the at Washington but it was revoked by Mr. Arthur when he assumed the Presidency. On that fatal July morning in 1881 he rode with President Garfield to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad station and was an eve witness to the fatal crime which sent the assassin Guiteau to the gallows, while it deprived the nation of its head. It is said that he never forgot the effect made upon him by witnessing this terrible sight. During the prolonged struggle between life and death which followed the murderous assault he was a constant visitor at the dying President's bedside and he was chosen by Congress as Garfield's eulogist, a duty which he filled in a masterly manner. Mr. Arthur was inaugurated on Sept. 19 and in the following December, as soon as he could arrange the affairs of the department, Mr. Blaine resigned to make place for his successor, William M. Evarts.

For the first time in twenty-three years Mr. Blaine found himself re poved from public office, and strictly speaking, a private individual again. He immediately set to work upon a labor which he had long planned, but which he had been too busy to carry out. This was his book, "Twenty Years in Congress." Its two large volumes are complete with interest of the most varied nature, and its first 200 pages are especially valuable as a resume of the early political history of this country, as well as a most care fully minute account of the political period between the administrations of Lincoln and Garfield. In 1884 he fin ally saw his fondest hopes realized when the National Republican convention at Chicago nominated him for the Presidency He immediately set to work and took a most vigorous part in the campaign. His share of the work showed an eager desire for his own success which his evident ambition had always indicated He was defeated in this election, as Grover Cleveland carried New York State by a majority of 1,047 votes, and the man who was not only perhaps the cleverest, but certainly the most ambitious American living, was again doomed to retire to private life. Mr. Blaine was, however, too wel trained a soldier-too battle-stained a veteran in the war of politics-to show his feelings to the outside world. He proceeded with the work upon his book, which was still unfinished, and in a short time had it ready for the press. It is certainly one of the most important contributions to the records of contemporaneous political history ever written by an American states: an, and as such deserves a high place in the literature of this class, not to mention its eminent value as a text-book for students o American politics. He spent the years of '87-'88 in Europe, having been orlered there by his doctors, who feare that carrying the burden of public life for so many years had seriously impaired his physique, which needed rest and change to enable it to recover its former stamina. From Paris he wrote a letter, afterwards published in the New York Tribune, urging that the campaign of '88 should also be fought out upon the platform of a protective tariff. In September, 1888, Blaine returned to America with a view of leading the Harrison campaign. His reception in New York city is the most memorable event of the kind in American history The king of a loyal nation was never more royally received. Thousands upon thousands of people from all sections of the United States crowded New York city and that night he talked to the largest audience ever addressed. Blaine worked his hardest for Harrison and his efforts undoubtedly were the leading factor of Republican success. Blaine was again placed at the head of the Department of State.

The most notable events of his last administration of the State Department-which was characterized by the same "vigorous foreign policy" as before-were the adjustment of the troubles with Italy arising from the the rather prolonged controversy with taken in the Behring Sea difficulty.

ENGLISH LADIES' TITLES.

Say Grace to a Duches, But Ma'am to a Princess. It is little wonder that foreigners bungle over our titles as they do says an English paper, when in our own public speeches and newspapers it is so often made plain that many do not understand how to use English titles. lor instance, a marquis' daughter who married a man without a title keeps the title of 'lady' and her own Christian name and adds to these the husband's surname. Thus, when Lady Evelyn Fitz-

·lord before their Christian names and surnames as 1 ord George Hamilton. Lord Charles Beresford and so on, and the only correct way of addressing or speaking of their wives is the same way putting 'lady' in the place of 'lord.'

To call the wives of the younger sons "Lady Hamilton" "Lady Beresford." or whatever is his surname without the male Christian name, is as incorrect as to call 'Lady Evelyn Cavendish" by her husband's full name.

On the other hand, the wife of a paronet or of a knight is "lady." with his surname alone after it Bismarck on War Scares.

"Why grant this enormous peace strength?" asked Bismarck, while talking with a London Times correspondent recently. "Who will be the con-queror in the war for the future? He who can win the first two or three battles, and those battles will no more be fought by millions of armed men than they have hitherto been, but by some two or three hundred thousand men at most, Large masses cannot be directed by a single general, not even with the help of a balloon. The chief things, as hitherto, will be good leadership and superior tactics, and for these an enormous increase in the army affords no kind of guarantee. With our present forces we can perfectly well operate on two fronts if we have the right kind of leadership. Count Caprivi himself spoke not so long ago with conviction against 'la rage des nombres.' Why is he all of a sudden converted to a belief in numbers and mere num-

"Again, we are told that the danger or war is greater. I, for my part, can ot see it. On the contrary, I that war cannot break out for the next two or three years. France is incomparably more peaceful and less ready to strike than she was in 1888. Then Boulanger had but to press the button and his dynasty was founded. Now any form of monarchy in France is more dangerous to the maintenance of peace with Germany than the republic. A monarchy would find it much easier to conclude alliances with monarchical States, especially with

"That the present rulers on the banks of the Seine are not thinking of war is shown by the Papal blessing they have asked and obtained for the republic. The Pope has done us no harm by granting it, for its effect was to allay the spirit of internal scrife in rance, to satisfy the great and universal and sincere desire of the French people for peace, and to make things moother and easier for those in power. The latter, moreover, know quite well that the first thing a rictorious French General would do would be to sweep them away with a lictator's broom. As for Russia, it is the fashion to describe her as panting for war wih Germany. But who wants war in Russia? Not the Czar. He is a cautious gentleman who asks for nothing beyond peace and quiet at home so long as he can get it. The vast majority of the Russian people do not want war. The only warlike elements in Russia are the press, the Poles and the Jews."

"It's an old story, but it is a good one," said Capt. Johnson, at the Southern. "I used to hear it often in St. Louis. Never heard it? Well, that's funny. Gen. Frank Blair shortly after the war went out on the plains with a prospecting party, I believe, under command of some army officers. I think Phil Sheridan and Gen. McCook were of the crowd. Their March took them through a part of the great alkali desert, which was not a very pleasant experience. One evening on going into camp there was a startling discovery to the effect that the whisky had given out. The general thirst had been great during the two or three days in the dry district. The judgment of the sutler had been at fault. Not a drop left. The situation was serious. 'A council of war was called. It

One morning, however, Gen. Pickett day furlough to the first man who should bring to headquarters a Federal prisoner. A visit home was a great inducement, and that very forenoon, under pretence of an exchange of papers, a Union soldier was captured and brought in.

In the evening of the same day a tall Yankee belonging to a New York regiment mounted his rifle-pit and waved a paper. The signal was answered by Sergeant Richardson of the Twentyeighth Virginia Infantry. The two men met between the lines, but instead of offering to swap newspapers, the New Yorker drew a pistol and called upon the Virginian to surren-

It was a fair retaliation, but Richardson did not feel like being a party to it. He seized the pistol by the barrel, and the next moment the two soldiers, both large and powerful men, were engaged, in a hand-to-hand encounter. For half an hour neither combatant secured any decided advantage. One shot was fired, and Richardson's little finger was carried away.

Then both men tripped and fell, and for another half-hour they had a "rough-and-tumble" fight. Both armies were looking on, and whenever either men obtained a temporary advantage his comrades cheered him lustily. Not a shot was fired from either army.

When the wrestlers got once more apon their feet, Richardson was seen to be still holding to the pistol with one hand, and brandishing a pine knot toward the Confederate lines.

At last, when both men were utterly exhausted, the Yankee proposed that they should lay the pistol on the ground and return each to his own comrades. The Southerner assented, and so the fight came to an end.

In the night Sergeant Richardson went to the scene of the conflict, and brought away not only the pistol, but the two hats which had been left on the ground. He still has the pistol and offers to return it to his opponent if the latter will return to him his missing finger.—Youth's Companion.

Countermanding Orders.

During the years of the revolutionary war the Rev. Samuel Buell was pastor of the Easthampton Church, on Long Island. He had beer pastor there a great many years, and had gained wide influence.

While the English occupied the Island, Sir William Erskine was in command. Between the parson and the military authorities a good understanding was kept up in spite of the political hostility.

There is yet told a story of the worthy patron to the effect that Sir William once ordered a number of the farmers of Easthampton to go over to Southampton to do a certain piece of work on the Sabbath. Before that day came around, however, the com mander happened to meet the parson, a d told him frankly that he had ordered out his parishioners on Sunday. "I know it. I know it." said the parson. "but, as it happens, I am myself commander-in-chief on that day, and I have countermanded the order.' Sir William yielded to the point with a good-natured laugh.

During the Black Hawk War, soldiers undertook to confiscate a team belonging to Elder Miller of Laporte, Ind., and not wishing to lose his property, Mr. Miller enlisted and went along. For some reason he was never formally discharged. About a year ago he presented a claim to the government for services, and 'tis said he will soon receive nearly $6,000.

Secretary of State John W. Foster will resign his portfolio before leaving for Paris, where he goes to act as agent for the United States before the Bering Sea arbitrators, who are to meet Feb. 23. As only three weeks will elapse between the date of the Secretary's departure and the end of the present administration the vacancy will not be filled. Assistant Secretary volunteered and put the bottle to his Wharton will act during the interim.

Our readers have doubtless noticed the numerous discussions by the scienists and hygienists as to the relative value of the various baking powders. A careful sifting of the evidence leaves no doubt as to the superiority of the Royal Baking Powder in purity, wholesomeness and strength, from a scientific standpoint An opinion, however, that will have perhaps greater influence with our practical housekeepers, is that given by Marion Harland, the well known and popular writer, upon matters pertaining to science of domestic economy, of housekeeping, and of home cooking. In a letter published in the Ladies Home Journal, this writer says:

"I regard the Royal Baking Powder as the best manufactured and in the market, so far as I have any experience been in the same trenches for almost in the use of such compounds. Since six months. The Federal lines were so the introduction of it into my kitchen, near that the soldiers could talk back I have used no other in making bisand forth, and something like friendly cuits, cakes, etc., and have entirely dis-relations had been established. The Official Souvenir of the Great Exposition-

5.000.000 of which were donated to the World's Columbian Exposition by the Government, are being rapidly taken by an enthusiastically patriotic people. As there early promical to be a demand for these Souvenirs that would render them very valuable in the hands of speculators, the Exposition Authorities decided to place the price at and sell them direct to the people, thus realizing $5,000,000, and using the additional money for the further development of the Fair.

Considering the fact that there were but 5,000,000 of these coins to be distributed among 65,000,000 people, in this country alone (to say nothing of the foreign demand,) and that many have already been taken, those wishing to purchase these mementoes of our Country's Discovery and of the grandest Exposition ever held, should secure as many as they desire at once.

A Remarkable Literary Announce-

Memit Memit.

Doubtless the most surprising, and perhaps the most important, literary announcement ever made to American book-buyers is Alden's edition of the Encyclopedia Brittannica, for $20,00. It is the genuine, unabridged, cloth-bound work, in large type, including over 20,500 pages and more than 10,000 illustrations, and 200 maps. The full set is now ready for delivery, And even this is not all: If you can't spare $20,00 at one time, by paylag only $1.00 extra you may, through the Encyclopedia Brittannica Co-operative Club, get the work on instalment payments of only five cents a day. Surely these most extraordinary terms ought to place this greatest of Encyclopedias [a library in itself, means something when applied to it] in every home. You can get specimen pages, with full particulars, tree, or a 128-page catalogue of choice books in every department of literature, besides, for a 2-cent stamp, by addressing funk B, Alden, Publisher, 57 Rose St., dressing John B. Gov. Francis speaking of the local paper says: Each year the local paper gives from $500 to $5000 in free lines to the community in which it is located. No other agency can or will do this. The editor in proportion to his means, does more for his town than any ten men, and in all fairness with men he ought to be supported, not because you like him or admire his writing, but because the local paper is the best investment a community can make. It may not be brilliantly edited or crowded with thoughts, but financially is of more benefit to a community than a teacher or preacher. Understand me I do not mean morally or intelectually, but financially, and yet on the moral question you will find that most of the local papers are on the right side. To-day the editor of the home paper does more for the least money of any man on
