Miss Lucy Scott, of Caro, was the November 8 last, which was election day. The declaration charges Maggie Sheridan, by herself, her agents and servants with having sold the liquor; it also charges that Croghan became intoxicated and was shot by a gun he was carrying on his way home, the load taking effect under his jaws, injuring and disfiguring him for life. It concludes by claiming five thousand dollars damages. Michael Sheridan and John Marshall are sureties on the bond of Maggie Sheridan, and are therefore made parties to the suit.

The Farmers' Institute Held on Monday and Tuesday was Well Attended and Much Interest Manifested.

The idea that plenty of "bone and muscle" are the only qualifications necessary to carry on the business of farm ing successfully, has long since been dispelled, and it is stead the fact that brains and good judgement are as essential qualities in the make-up of an agriculturist, has been well established. Now that modern farming has been reduced to a science each season notes valuable discoveries and new methods which tend to bring the avocation to a finer and more profitable point. The institues which are yearly held in different parts of the state, under the supervision of the faculty of the State Agricultural College are, in themselves, schools for the farmer, where he may go and obtain valuable and practical ideas which are the result of scientific experiments and careful study on the parts of the different professors; and he may also exchange views with his fellow agricultur-

The institute that was held here this week Monday and Tuesday, while really a branch of the institute held at Bad Axe, was largely attended, and we are confident that it will eyentually prove a benefit to all farmers who attended and the community in general.

Some deviations were necessarily made from the published program, but the interest was kept up throughout. We are not prepraed to speak in detail of the different papers, etc., but all are spoken of as being highly interesting and

The Populists.

The state convention of the People's party to nominate candidates for supreme justice and regents of the University was called to order in the opera house at Ionia by Dr. A. W. Nichols, of Greenville, chairman of the state central committee. Mr. Nichols in a short speech congratulated the party on the splendid showing made, and thought that a half a dozen northwestern states would never again be carried by either of the old parties and that it was the destiny of the People's party to break the solid south. He concluded by introducing Honorable J. W. Ewing, the standard bearer in the recent campaign, as temporary chairman of the convention. Henry I. Allen was made temporary chairman. Mrs. Emery, of Lansing, spoke on female suffrage. Committees reported and the organization was made permanent.

The Omaha and Jackson platform were reaffirmed by the resolution committee report. Prohibition was not in favor, the reneal of the Miner law was condemned, the state legislature is commended for passing the joint resolution favoring the election of U. S. Senators by direct vote of the peo-

Spring Election Ballots.

In response to numerous inquiries Attorney-General Ellis has announced that, for the spring election, tickets bearing the names of the candidates for the supreme justice, regents of the university, circuit judge and county commissioners of schools, must be printed under the supervision of the county election commissioners, while separate tickets, on which shall appear the names of candidates for city, village or township officers, must be printed under the direction of the city, village or township commissioners, provided for under the statute. Separate ballot boxes for the two classes of tickets must be provided.

Democratic State Convention.

The next Democrat state convention will meet in Detroit, Tuesday, February 28 at 12 o'clock noon, in the Auditorium building to nominate a candidate for associate justice of the supreme court and two candidates for regents of the state university. Each county in the state will be entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last election and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 250 votes, but no county is to have less than two delegates in in the convention. This will increase the total number of delegates from 810

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

SENATE—Forty-second day.—The Senate refused to take up the New Jersey and New York bridge bill and after a few other matters had been disposed of a very warm general discussion was had upon the bill to promote the safety of employes and travelers on railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continous brakes, and their locomotives with driving wheel brakes. Mr. Cullom had the bill in hand and, in response to questions from various members, stated that a number of railroads were equipping their cars; that he had never heard of any read deferring a dividend in order to equip their cars; that the freight employes had rather have the link and plin coupling in preference to so many varieties of automatic couplings, but if one style was universal (as the Interstate Commerce commission proposed) that would be preferable. As all the opposition to the bill came from Democratic Senators Senator Chandler took occassion to twit them upon their falling away from the platform adopted by the Democratic national convention. He said that platform contained strong provisions for the repeal of the Sherman silver act and for the protection of life and limb of railroad employes, yet only II Democratic votes could be mustered against the Sherman act and now they are opposing their platform by opposing the automatic coupling bill—a humanitarian measure. The Senate adjourned without acting upon the bill. House,—The Senate amendments to the Harter bill of lading were concurred in. The legislative appropriations and deficiencies. It was read in full and referred to the committee on foreign relations. The bill was introduced to cover the possible annexation of Hawaii. Executive session. Adjourned. HOUSE.—The counting of the electoral vote was the principal feature of the day's session.

SENATE.—Forty-fourth day.—The automatic car coupler bill occupied the attention of the Senators. Several amendments were agreed to, but the bill went over without action. House.—The silver men won a victory and defeated all chances of passing the repeal of the Sherman silver act. The vote was on the demand for the previous question and resulted was 152 nays, 143—a majority. was on the demand for the previous question and resulted, yeas, 152; navs, 143—a majority of nine for the silver men. The resolution to repeal was then recommitted to the committee or rules. In committee of the whole on the legislative appropriation bill amendments were adopted approving that hereafter no public building shall be draped in mourning; that the executive departments shall not be closed out of respect to deceased officials, and prohibiting the use of public funds for funeral expenses of government officials or employes. The committee arose, the bill was passed and the House adjourned.

SENATE.—Forty-fifth day—The car coupler bill was again a subject of discussion and bill was again a subject of discussion and went over without action. A memorial was received from the Chicago Chamber of Commerce favoring the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands. The House bill which provides for sundry light houses and other aids to navigation, and which was passed by the Senate, was reconsidered, the Senate amendments rejected and the bill passed just as it came from the House. A bill was passed to prohibit the transportation of merchandise from one American port to another American port through a foreign port. Executive session. Adjourned. HOUSE.—The day was occupied by a very listless discussion, in committee of the whole, on the pension appropriation of $166,400,000—the theme being the need of retrenchment. The evening session was taken up by the consideration of private pension bills.

SENATE.—Forty-sixth day.—The bill to promote the safety of employes and travelers upon railroads by compelling railway companies to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving wheel brakes, was disposed of. The substitute for the House bill of last session was agreed to and the bill passed, yeas 39, nays 10. The bill goes back to the House. The conference report on the fortifications bill was agreed to. HOUSE.—The general debate on the pension appropriation bill was continued. No other business.

TWELVE WERE DROWNED.

An Atlantic Steamer Meets an Awful Disaster in Mid-Ocean.

London cable: The Allen Line steam ship Pomeranian, from Glasgow, via. Moville for New York, has returned to Greenock, in distress, after having met with one of the most fatal accidents that has occurred to a trans-Atlantic steamer for many years. The accident resulted in the loss of twelve lives. The disaster occurred when the steamer was about 1,150 miles out in the midst of a heavy storm. Every precaution had been taken by the officers and Suddenly a tremendous sea reared its erest a short distance ahead of the steamer as she plunged down a wave. Before she could rise the sea came over the starboard bow and tons of green water rushed aft. Almost at the same time a falling wave astern pooped the steamer and the deck saloon, the chart house, the bridge and the boats were smashed to pieces and partly washed overboard. At first the full extent of the disaster was not The steamer began to pay off known. before the wind and sea and it was at once seen that the quartermasters had been carried away. Two sailors sprang to the wheel and soon put the steamer on her course. Then it was found that Captain Dalziel, the master of the steamer, was missing. The second officer, John Cook, who had the watch, and John Hamilton, the fourth officer were on the bridge, and both were carried overboard. The others lost were in the saloon deck house at the time.

A punt containing three persons was applied and sunk at Minden, Ont., Mrs. Norman Fetterly and her brother, Joseph Mitchell, were drowned.

44 MANIACS BURNED.

FRIGHTFUL HOLOCAUST IN AN INSANE ASYLUM.

There Were 48 People Confined in the Building and but Four Escaped---The Keeper Made Heroic Efforts to Rescue Them --- The Fire a Mystery.

The county insane asylum, four miles from Dover, N. H., has burned and 44 lives were lost. When Watchman Wm. Chevey made his 10 o'clock trip into the insane asylum, he found the fire coming out of a cell occupied by a woman and gave the alarm. Wm. Driscoll, the keeper, with his family, lived in the building and he at once broke the locks off the 54 cells and tried to get the inmates out. Then he saved his wife and two children, none of whom were dressed. Of the 48 inmates only four escaped. walked two miles in a blinding snow storm, with only his shirt on, to a farmer's house where he was taken care of.

The building was of wood, two stories high, with a big yard on each side. It was built twenty years ago and cost $15,000. The main building in which were 30 of the county poor, caught fire, but was saved by the heroic efforts of the inmates. The Dover fire department was summoned, but, owing to the distance, the blinding snow storm and the icy roads, it took 95 minutes for the department to be of service.

An examination of the ruins disclosed the fact that most of the inmates had been suffocated in their beds by the smoke and heat. The origin of the fire is a complete mystery.

WE ARE IN IT.

The United States, France and Russia Form a Triple Alllance.

A triple alliance between the United States, Russia and France—such is the international combination of forces for mutual benefit and defense which has been secretly pending for six years. Singularly enough the ratification of the extradition treaty with Russia leaves before the Senate no business of the state department which has not been acted upon. This is the crowning glory of the administration of the state department under Mr. Blaine which it has been the fortune of Mr. Foster to conclude. Within the past six months two treaties, the only ones pending before the Senate, have been ratified. These are the extradition treaties with Russia and France and as has been stated their ratification is of world wide significance.

In ratifying these treaties the United States government has received distinct pledges of the support of Russia and France, by force if necessary, against any interference by Germany, Great Britain or any other European power with the maintenance by the United States of what is commonly termed "the Monroe doctrine."

In other words, the control of the Hawaiian Islands, the annexation of British America, the acquisition of Cuba, Hayti and San Domingo and the ultimate expulsion of Great Britain from Bermuda are all possibilities in fulfilling which the United States would be upheld by the two powers which in European politics are most distinctly opposed to the dreibund, the alliance between Germany, Austria and Italy.

Should England protest against the acquisition of the Hawaiian Islands or the annexation of Canada by the United States, the British lion do nothing more than growl in the faces of the forces which are thus brought to the support of our new navy.

CITY OF PEKING IN PORT. Broken Shaft Delayed the Pacific Steamer

Almost Two Weeks. The steamer City of Peking from Yokohoma has arrived at San Francisco, 13 days overdue. Capt. Searles reports that the Peking sailed from Yokohoma on time and all went well until the eleventh day, when about 1,100 miles from San Francisco the shaft broke. It was impossible to repair it and the vessel proceeded under sail and encountered heavy head winds nearly all the way. Considerable alarm had been created in shipping circles by the continued absence of the vessel and the Pacific mail steamship San Juan was started out to search for her, but missed her and steamed on to Yokohoma.

Canada and France Reciprocate. In the treaty of commerce which has been signed between France and Canada, Canada accords to France important reductions in the duties on wines, soap and almonds, as well as all the commercial advantages which she many eventually offer to other states. France agrees to apply the minimum tariff to certain products, notably wood for pavements, preserved meats and preserved and fresh fish. Canada is said to be disposed to grant a subsidy to a line of steamers running a direct service between France and that country.

Burglars Cause Two Bables to Freeze. A few days ago Mrs. Ben Baker, of Kansas City, Mo., gave birth to twins. John Baker, a brother, rooms them, and sleeps in an upper room. During the night he grew thirsty, came down stairs to get a drink of water and found the house very cold. He went into his brother's room and found Martin and his wife in a stupor. After much difficulty he aroused them. Burglars had been in the house, chloroformed husband and wife and in departing left a window open. The two little babies were frozen to death.

It was his business to feed the digester, a boiling vat, and he was busy on the edge of the va when he slipped into the boiling fluid feet first. The vat had been filling rapidly through the pipes that supply it and he was buried in it up to his neck. He was taken to a hospital but soon died in dreadful agony.

HAWAII IS OURS.

The United States Minister at Honolulu Establishes a Protectorate.

The steamer Australia has arrived at San Francisco and brings the good news of the action of United States Minister Stevens in establising a protectorate over the island, by issuing the following proclamation;

UNITED STATES LEGATION, ) February 1, 1893.

To the Hawaiian people: At the request of the provisional government of Hawaiian Islands, I hereby, in the name of the United States of America, assume protection of the Hawaiian Island for the protection of the life and property and occupation of public buildings and Hawaiian soil, so far as may be necessary for the purpose specified, but not interfering with the administration of public affairs by the provisional government. This action s taken pending, and subject to negotiations at Washington.
(Signed.) JOHN G. STEVENS,

Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States. Approved and executed by G. C. Wilts, captain U.S. N., commanding the United States steamer Boston.

Capt. Wilts repaired to the government building and a few moments later a batallion from the United States ship Boston under Lieut. Swinburn, marched up the street, entered the grounds and drew up in front of the building. Detachments from three volunteer companies, A., B. and C., were drawn up in line under command of their repective captains, Seigler, Gunn and Canara. Lieut. Rush read in a loud voice the proclamation, and amid the breathless expectancy of all present the American flag saluted by the troops and the cannon of the Boston was raised over the tower of Aliolani (the royal) hall.

Seven Quarrymen Killed.

One of the worst disasters in the history of marble quarrying occurred at West Rutland, Vt., in a quarry operated by the Vermont Marble company, with which Senator Proctor is con-

A great mass of stone fell into the quarry and seven men were instantly killed and others injured. The victims were crushed so that some could not be recognized. The accident was near the extreme end of the quarry, far under the hill. The killed and some of the injured were buried under tons of rock and the work of rescue was necessarily difficult. The mass of stone which covered the men who were at work close by was, as near as can be estimated 60 feet in length and 20 feet wide. It fell without the least warning and all who were at work there were covered. There were about 80 men at work in the quarry.

Plenty of Gold," Says Secretary Foster. Secretary of Treasury Chas. Foster, says: "I do not think the gold situation critical enough to warrant the issue of bonds. The banks of New York have today $80,000,000 worth of gold and they are ready at any time to give it to us in exchange for green-backs. I do not think the failure to repeal the Sherman silver act will result in driving gold out of the country. I believe the supply of gold sufficient to meet all adequate demands. I do not consider the condition of the country at all critical. The government is in position to redeem all its promises, but I think the gold reserve ought to be increased."

An act has been introduced in the Kentucky legislature "to prevent the sale, loan and wearing of hoop skirts."

WEEKLY TRADE REVIEW.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: Two important events, the defeat of anti-silver bill legislation in the Senate and House and the concerted deposit of gold by New York banks in the treasury for legal tenders, have directly opposing but powerful influence upon the markets, and it is yet too early to determine what the net result may be. Speculative markets have been quito irregular. The anti-option bill still alarms some, while the vote in the House leads others to believe it will not become a law. Pork products show greater strength and have further advanced, supplies of hogs being very small. Coffee has been strong, advancing a quarter with moderate sales. Wheat has risen 1½c. Cotton declined 3-16c. Nover has there been a more phenomenally satisfactory season for textile manufactures or goods. Exports are improving a little, but the outgo of $4,000,000 in gold expected is not due to trade balances. If the tentative action of strong banks does not check the movement, further measures by the clearing houses are contemplated for prevention of disturbance. The treasury has not been losing gold, and the soundest men feel that the treasury and the banks operating to harmony should be abundantly able to meet difficulties until the new administration makes known its policy. The business failures occurring during the last seven days number 26c. For the corresponding week of last year the figures were 276.

The Carbon Steel company, of Pittsburg, Pa., has contracted with William Cramp & Sons for furnishing all of the boiler plates for the three new Inman Line steamships. The plates will be the widest and heaviest ever made in

THE BURGLAR.

Ezra Timmins was a steady man of forty, who had been fifteen years bookkeeper for the prosperous grocery house of Ham, Bacon, Lard & Co. He had lived ten years with his wife in the same house at 7095 Eddy street and had saved money, for his habits were frugal, his pleasures simple, his pains few. His pleasures consisted of an occasional game of whist, at which Mrs. Timmins was always his partner, for the reason that he would not allow anyone else to scold her when she revoked, though he did not mind scolding her himself. His pains were an unreasoning terror of burglars and a dire apprehension that his niece and ward, pretty Constance Timmins-who was the only young person in his house-would end one of her many flirtations by throwing herself away on some worthless

To guard against burglars he cultivated an acquaintance with the policemen who alternated on the beat, and dropped mysterious hints of munificent rewards in case they caught a burglar in the act. He had a burglar alarm in his bedroom and a shot-gun, from which Mrs. Timmins was in the habit of withdrawing the cartridges for fear he should shoot himself. Many a sleepless night he spent in prowling about the house in the dark in quest of some intruder whose footstep he thought he heard. He read every article in the newspapers about burglaries, and surprised his wife and niece by the extent and accuracy of his information touching the methods of the fraternity. He plunged them into depths of despair by declaring that he knew it was his destiny to wake up some morning and find the house robbed and Constance's throat

Constance was a lovely girl, the daughter of an elder brother of Timmins who had gone South after the war, bought a plantation, taken the vellow fever, and died, leaving an estate of which the value was unknown. She was a coquette, and had a host of admirers who seldom commanded the approval of her uncle or aunt. If they were young, Uncle Ezra said they were snips and ought to be in the nursery; if they were old, he said they should be in some old people's home. Constance laughed at his invectives, and when her uncle forbade this or that man the house, she met him elsewhere, if he had taken her

Among the admirers who could not fairly be condemned to the nursery was Colonel Pitblado. He had met Constance at a small party, and had been struck by her beauty and vivacity. With his usual circumspection, he had instituted inquiries regarding her prospective fortune; from the assiduity with which he pursued her afterward, it may be inferred that the result of the investigation had been satisfactory.

Much to his annoyance, Constance not only did not ask him to the house, but begged as a favor that he would not come, at any rate for the present

"You see, Colonel Pitblado," said she. "I have rather taken a fancy to you, and I don't want to lose you. Now, my uncle, who is the best man in the world, invariably takes a dislike to people who pay me attention. I have a presentiment that if you came to the house he would quarrel with you, and that would be the end of our acquaintance."

The colonel argued, but it was of no avail. The only concession which Constance would make was that now and then, say once a week, she would leave the door open after her uncle had gone to bed, and the colonel might slip in and spend a few minutes with her in the dark in the hall or in the drawing-room.

"I know," said she, "that you are too much of a gentleman to make me regret my good nature; any way, I think I can take care of myself."

The colonel's behavior was beautiful; his speech was eloquent on the subject of his love, but he rarely ventured even to press the fingers of his charmer as they sat side by side on the sofa.

There they sat, one night, and Constance, in a subdued voice, was explaining her uncle's extraordinary terror of burglars. "Has he ever been robbed?" asked the colonel.

"I believe that when he was a child, burglars broke into the house where he was living, and killed one of the inmates. He was wakened out of bed by the sound of the shot, and he has never got over the shock."

"I can quite understand it," replied the colonel. "There is something peculiarly terrifying in a midnight encounter with a man whom you cannot see, and who has everything to gain and little to lose by taking your life."

"Oh!" cried Constance. "the thought fills me at times with such horror that I am as afraid of burglars as my uncle. I think that if I saw one in my room, I would die of fright.

"I hope," said the colonel, laughing, "that I would not show the white feather. But I must say I do not hanker to meet a burglar in the on the floor. Had he killed the heard outside the drawing room door. It was the faintest possible creak of a weak flooring plank under a tread. Both the tenants of the sofa looked up and held their breath, with ears on the full strain. Another board creaked, and presently, after a wait which seemed at least for ages, the acute ears of the colonel detected a mufiled tread on the carpet of the room in which they sat. There was a third party in the room. He was shod with wool, and was moving noiselessly, and occasionally stopping as if to listen whether he was detected. The long expected burglar had

Constance faint d silently on the sofa. The colonof, in whom the presence of danger had awakened his fighting instinct, rose from his seat and groped his way noiselessly to-ward the intruder, whom he could not see. He could, by this time, hear the scoundrel's breath coming and going and instinct prompted him to hold his own. He would have given worlds for a weapon, but his cane was out of reach. He must give battle with his bare hands against one who probably had both pistol and knife. As he reflected, the intruder's foot came in contact with a stool. The colonel hesitated no longer; with a sudden spring, he was upon the invader. He had thrown his weight into the spring, and felled the burglar to the ground, face downward. Then swiftly seizing his wrists, he held them in a grip of iron, twisted the arms upward, and sat down on his back. The burglar struggled, evidently striving to free one hand to use his knife; but the colonel was now fighting for his life; his clutch of the wrists did not relax. When the struggle grew weaker, and Pitblado had got back his breath, he hissed:

"You villain! If you don't keep your hands still, I'll drive my knife through your vitals. One motion and you are a dead man."

The burglar made no reply. He panted, and sounds came from him which to Pitblado's ear sounded which to Pitblado's ear sounded strangely like a sob. The colonel derived a qualified satisfaction from his stillness. If he had dared to loose his clutch of the fellow's wrists, he would have tried to throttle him: but the danger of a stab in the side, if he moved his hands to the burglar's throat, was too obvious. He thought of shouting for help. But that would have betrayed his presence in Constances' drawing-room after the lights were out and when her uncle was in bed. He would rather risk the knife than compromise her. He supposed that she had fled upstairs, whereas, in fact, she was in a dead faint on the sofa. What was he to do? Was he to stay sitting on that burglar all night? While he ransacked his brain for an expedient a deep groan came from the man under him. The burglar gasped

"Yes, I daresay," said Pithlado: "you'll show us lots of things. That cock won't fight. It's I that am going to show you the door of the other

The colonel could feel a quiver go through the frame on which he sat. The burglar went on: "I'll show you-

"Haven't I told you that I am going to do all the showing in this menagerie?"

"If you'll only lift your weight off my lungs, so I can breathe " said the burglar.

"You'd make use of your breath to drive a knife into me, wouldn't you? Not much. I'm just thinking how I shall kill you so as not to ruin the carpet-

"Oh! oh!" came from the prostrate body.

"What an unreasonable fellow you are!" said the colonel: "here I've let you live for some so many minutes while I have been studying how to put you to death."

"Spare my life," gurgled the burg-

"Why should I?" "I'll-I'll show you where the silver is."

"You'll show me," repeated the colonel, puzzled.

"I will. I give you my honor, I will." "Oh, I see," said Pitblado; "you want to divide. It won't do." "What more do you want?"

"I don't intend," said the colonel, 'that you shall have a single spoon." "Take them all; take them all. Only let me keep Connie's christening-cup."

"By George!" muttered Pitblado, "you're a romantic sort of a chap to be a burglar."

It had by this time become manifest to the colonel that the situation. could not be prolonged forever. He could not sit on that burglar's back till morning-the tensions of the muscles of his arms was weakening. He must somehow, get him to the nearest police station. If he only hada ray of light!

At that moment a faint groan came from the sofa.

"By the Lord!" muttered the colonel; "he's got an accomplice." Another sound from the sofa, and Pitblado saw that time was up. The new-comer might any moment rush to the rescue of his accomplice. Pitblado had noticed a poker and shovel in front of the drawing-room grate. With a sudden spring he regained his feet, let the burglar go, leaped to the grate, and seized the poker.

A wild shrick came from the sofa, and simultaneously the colonel struck a match. By its flare he saw, to his amazement, Connie sitting upon the sofa and the burglar lying motionless seeing Connie, muttered: "Let him take all the silver, Connie, except your christening cup. If he will spare our lives, we'll not prosecute."

It did not take long to get Mr. Timmins upon the sofa, and, as he was not hurt, a glass of rum, administered by the tender hands of Connie, restored him to his senses. His mind was still confused. He murmured:

"I have had a narrow escape, my poor Constance. I seemed to hear a noise in this room, and stepped in, when a man of gigantic strength leaped on me, and was about to kill me, when you must have appeared and frightened him away.'

"That is not quite exact, dear uncle. While you were struggling in the most heroic way with a burglar, Colonel Pitblado happened to pass, entered the house by the front door which the burglar had left open, drove the fellow away and rescued you. Allow me to introduce you---Mr. Timmins, Colonel Pitblado."---John Bonner in the Argonaut,

OIL IN SUMATRA.

Wells Discovered Which Are Rich in Fluid of a High Character.

The colonial secretary of Singapore in a recent report on the kerosene trade of the colony, mentions a new oil field, for some time known, but only recently become productive, in the Northern part of the island of Sumatra, in the state of Langkat, with a seaboard on the Straits of Malaca. Concessions have been granted by the Dutch government to both Dutch and English capitalists, but so far a Dutch company is the only one which has got to work, and after a commencement within the last twelve months, it is now reported to be producing from 15,000 to 20,000 cases per month, with a steadily increasing output.

Altogether concessions have been granted for some 320 square miles of what has been pronounced by experts to be a very rich oil-producing territory, and being on the seacoast, and not, like American and Russian oil fields, far inland, and having besides an excellent deep water, well-sheltered harbor, its position may be said to be unique.

Also the kerosene produced at Langkat is proved by a skillful English engineer to be of first-rate quality, being water white, absolutely without bloom, flashing by Abel's test at 83 to 86 degrees, and burning at 124 to 120 degrees, the percentage of kerosene yielded being fully equal to good American and quite double that of Russian petroleum.

When it is borne in mind that the Russian output in 1891 was 34,000,000 barrels, the bulk of which was obtained from an area of about seven square miles of the oil field near Baku, the capabilities of the new oil field in Sumatra may be judged, assuming that it fulfils the expectations of those who have examined it.

COOK'S TAMARINDS.

The Grove That the Great Explorer Made

Famous Is Cut Down. One of the most conspicuous objects on the Island of Tahiti is Venus Point, named by Captain Cook in 1769, when he set his astronomical instruments there for the purpose of observing the transit of Venus. At this point was a handsome grove of tall tamarind trees. Cook spent many hours in their pleasant shade and left on record evidences of his admiration, says the New York Sun. Ever since his book was published the grove has been known as "Cook's Tamarinds," and nearly all visitors to Tahiti have considered it their duty to speak of this famous Attle grove of trees.

Count Lanjus, of the German Navy, recently visited Tahiti, and in an article he has written for Petermann's Mittellungen, he says that "the famous grove known as Cook's Tamarinds exists no more." He adds that the grove came into possession of a new owner, and, because the trees shut out a particular view, the purchaser cut down every tree. The stumps are still to be seen, but Cook's Tamarinds are no more.

Near the grove was the fort which Cook erected for the protection of those who were to make the astronomical observations. It was during the first visit of Cook to the island that his men had much trouble with the natives, who, while very friendly, were bent upon stealing everything they could lay their hands on. They even walked off with the ship's anchor, and Cook lost his quadrant, and it was some time before he recovered it. The kind-hearted captain, however, said himself that there was some excuse for the pagans, for nails, beads, hatchets and every trifle they could carry away had for them as much temptation as jewels and untold silver and gold would have for a civilized person.

Young People on the Farm.

About this time farm boys and girls are flattening their noses against the window glass, looking out at the desolate fields and sky, and wishing-how earnestly!-that they were only city children and could see the lights, the shows and the brilliant streets. They wish beyond anything that they could go somewhere, anywhere, away from the drear monotony. Meantime in their breasts is forming the firm resolve to get away from the country and into the city the very hour their wings are strong enough to fly from the home nest.

Well, small blame to them. Farm life in winter in too many homes is anything but an attractive one. Yet it might be made vastly better than it is, even by the poorest farmer. Agriculturists sometimes practice economy in a grinding pennywise way that is the mistake of their lives. It is a bitter mistake not to provide their children with the best of that food which can be had so abundantly in the country. The delicacies should not be sold off and the children placed upon a skimmilk and bacon diet. Children should be encouraged to take interest in plants and animals, watching their growth and tending them. If farm parents allowed their young people a pecuniary interest in the calves, chickens, lambs and pigs they tend, it would give life a new zest.

There, too, is the reading matter which is so scarce in many farm homes. We have seen homes in which a set of defunct patent office reports constituted the whole library. It is real economy for a man by any means to subscribe for some of the delightful and educating newspapers and magazines which will make his children love their homes and parents more and be happier and more contented. Meantime, so far as our own excellent and entertaining journal is concerned, now is the time to subscribe.

Women Inventors.

A writer in the periodical Invention calls attention to the fact that women have often invented machines that were quite outside the realm of home and housekeeping—as, for instance, a life saving raft and a device to prevent sparks from locomotives.

These things certainly show the ingenuity of weman's powerful mind. But there is a field in which women inventors ought to be quite at home, where labor saving machines are more needed than anywhere else. This is exactly the field with which women are supposed to be most familiar-the household. Housework of all kinds is a hundred years be-

Where is the invention, electrical or otherwise, that will enable us to get rid of the awful slavery of building fires in our houses and fighting coal smoke, dust and ashes during our mortal lives? Where are the inventions that will make of housework something else than unwelcome, badly performed drudgery?

Dr. Nansen, the Norse explorer, will take his departure for the north pole from the mouth of the Lena river, on the coast of Siberia, next June. He will steam northward just as far as he can before the ice catches him at the close of summer. This will be in the beginning of September, he thinks. He will drive his ship into the ice and stay in her quietly till the next spring. Then he will endeavor to reach the pole itself as Eliza, in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," reached the Ohio shore and freedom. He will travel by the floating ice floes, always in a northerly direction, till he reaches the pole. He expects the ice floes will drift westward with the polar current, which he firmly believes in. This current and his own movements in a northern direction will at length take him to the pole itself and beyond, and finally float him and his little party into the Greenland sea, between Spitzbergen and Greenland, about 80 degs. north latitude. There will not be more than a dozen men in the party and they will take provisions for five years. This is the boldest scheme yet devised for reaching the pole, but sometimes sheer boldness wins where all else fails. Possibly Peary and Nansen will meet in those frozen solitudes. But once they have made their farewells at home next summer. will their friends ever see either of them

Influence of Football.

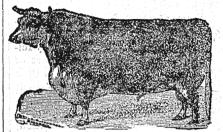

One good result may come of the football mania. The constant running and high kicking may develop the legs of our young men so that when the colonial fashion of knee breeches and long stockinged shanks comes in again, as it will, young America will have a pair of strong and shapely calves to display. But counting in even this, do the good results of football counterbalance the bad?

Since an English writer said that football is to Great Britain what bull baiting is to Spain, advocates of the favorite college game evidently feel that they are on the defensive. They are bringing forward all that can be said in its favor. Football is so popular, they say, because in these piping times of peace it is mimic war, nearest to a real battle of anything possible to a nation at peace with the world. Of course this argument implies that war is desirable and a good thing for mankind. The scientific strategy of war, such as Napoleon and Von Moltke applied to their campaigns, can be studied and practiced with the greatest advantage by football players, says one writer. The fierce excitement, the exultation of victory, are present in football as in fighting; also the very important factor of chance, enabling all the professional and unprofessional gamblers to bet to their satisfaction.

So far as the application of military science to the game of football is concerned, however, probably the favorite tactics of the Confederate general, N. B. Forrest, to "git the most men thar fust," is quite sufficient. But if the chief claim of this game to public favor is that it is mimic battle and should therefore be encouraged, what becomes of the other and older claim that it is an admirable means for athletic development? We used to hear much about that; we hear little now. We do hear occasionally of a great game, where just in the nick of time one champion knocked another down and set a foot upon his face, thereby disabling him and winning the game. This scientific strategy is applauded by respectable citizens who would hold up their hands in horror at the thought of a prize fight. It is to be remembered, too, that men are killed oftener in football than in prize fights.

One result of the football mania is that the refined, quiet youth who shrinks from athletic games of the nose and shin Correspondence Solicited.

breaking type is below par in the general estimation, though he have the brain of a Herbert Spencer. The youth who has the brute power of kicking and clawing developed in the highest degree is the greatest hero. On the smaller fry of boys that are spectators of a modern champion football game the effect cannot be otherwise than to increase the natural ferocity and cruelty in the callow human breast.

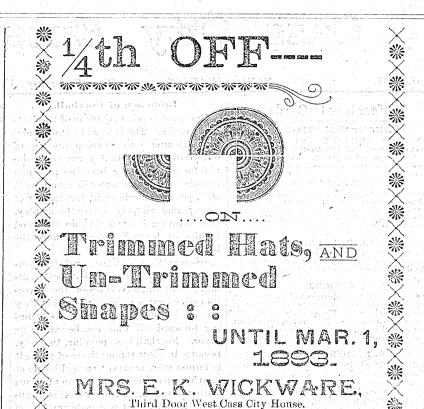

Worst of all, however, is the afterclap of a great football game. It does not seem that a game is necessarily followed by a grand spree on the part of the players and several hundreds of their friends, but the truth is that this result does follow. Around Yale and Princeton naturally cluster in the popular mind the highest flowering of our civilization, yet the Yale and Princeton students disgrace even the meanest civilization by their orgies after the annual Thanksgiving football game at New York. Drinking saloons, gambling resorts and dives of the lowest order are thronged by the high bred young gentlemen. No unwhipped mob of hoodlums in the rural districts ever behaved worse than these students on their Thanksgiving spree. If such excesses are a necessary attendant of the glorious game of football, then it were better that the glorious game should be abolished.

Families are migrating from the French part of Canada to the United States by the hundreds. There is a veritable exodus over the border, a French Canadian writer says. Never mind; we are only annexing Canada.

South Carolina could not live up to her blue china. Some time ago, during a war cry of reform, she abolished the acceptance of free railway passes by members of the legislature and state officers. Now there is a movement to abolish the DRUNKEDNESS, or LEQUOR HARDER prohibition. When human nature arrives at that stage where it can resist the temptation to take a free railroad pass or theater ticket it has nearly reached the point of angelhood.

A Thrilling Picture of the Dreadful Scenes of the Arena Two Thousand Years Ago-Shattered Idols of Pa

BROOKLYN, Feb. 12.—The Rev. Dr. Talmage BROOKLYN, Feb. 12.—The nev. Dr. Lamage this morning, after commenting on the Scriptures and giving out hymns, in which the mu titude of worshipers in the Brooklyn Tabernacle joined, discoursed from the text, Romans 1:15: "I am ready to preach the Gospel to you that are at Rome, also."

Rome! What a city it was when Paul visited it! What a city it is now! Rome! The place where Virgil sang and Horace satirized and Terence laughed and Cataline conspired and Ovid dramatized and Nero fiddled and Vespasian persecuted and Sulla legislated and Cicero thundered and Aurelius Vossische Zeitung, objects to the and Decius and Caligula and Julian translation of "Tom Brown's School- and Hadrian and Constanting and Paul the Augustus reigned, and Paul, the

Wickedness of all sorts at a high premium and Righteousness THE litigant who not long ago ninety-nine and three-fourths per cent off. And now he passes by the foun dations of a building which is to be almost unparalleled for vastness. You can see by the walls, which have begun to rise, that here is to be something enough stupendous to astound cracked. There is at least the lesson | the centuries. Aye, it is the Colosseum

Of the theater at Ephesus where Paul fought with wild beasts, of the temple of Diana, of the Parthenon, of Pharaoh's palace at Memphis, and of other great buildings, the ruins of which I ing upon the proposal to annex the have seen, it has been my privilege to Hawajian islands to the United States address you, but a member of my famsays: "We could not allow the United States to annex the islands!" Tut! spoken to you of the Colosseum at Don't get bumptious. It isn't a quessons are so impressive.

Perhaps, while in Rome, the law of contrast wrought upon me. I had visited the Mamertine dungeon where Paul was incarcerated. I had measured the opening at the top of the dun-geon through which Paul had been let down and it was twenty-three inches by twenty-six. The ceiling, at its highest point, was seven feet from the floor, but at the sides of the room, the ceiling was five feet, seven inches. The room, at the widest, was fifteen feet. There was a seat of rock two and half feet high. There was a shelf four feet high. The only furniture was a spider's web suspended from the roof, which I saw by the torchlight I carried. There was the subterraneous passage from the dungeon to the Roman forum, so that the prisoner could be taken directly from mal and terrific place. coal hole so lark or so forbidding. The place was to me a nervous shock, for I remembered that was the best thing that the world would afford the most illusrious being, except One, that it ever saw, and that from that place Paul went out to die. From that spot, I visited the Colosseum, one of the most astounding miracles of architecture that the world THE English army officer sent over to reconstruct the Canadian militia and render it efficient to resist, the awful, predatory designs of the Colosseum is so well preserved that we can stand in the center and recall all that it once was. It is in shape ellipsoidal, oval, oblong. It is in snape ellipsoidal, oval, oblong. It is, at its greatest length, 612 feet. After it had furnished seats for 87,000 people, it had room for 15,000 more to stand, so that 100,000 people could sit and stand transfixed by its scenes of courage and martyrdom and brutality and horror. Instead of our modern tickets of admission, they entered by ivory check, and a check dug up near Rome within a few years, was marked Section 6, Lowest Tier, Seat No. 18." You understand that the building was not constructed for an audience to be addressed by human voice, although I tested it with some friends and could be heard across it, but it was made only for the seeing and was circular and at any point allowed full view of the spectacle. The arena in the center in olden times was strewn with pounded stone or sand, so as not to be too slippery with human blood, for if it were too slippery it would spoil the fun. The sand flashed here and there with sparkles of silver and gold, and Nero added cinnabar and Caligula ad-ded chrysocolla. The sides of the arena were composed of smooth marble, eleven feet high, so that the wild beasts of the arena could not climb up into the audience. On the top of these sides of smooth marble was a metal railing, having wooden rollers, which easily revolved, so that if a panther should leap high enough to scale the with his paw touch any one of those rollers, it would revolve and drop him back again into the arena. Back of this marble wall surrounding stone, adorned with statues of gods immediately after entering the arena, crying: "Hail, Cæsar! Those about to die salute thee." The different ranks of spectators were divided by partitions studded with mosaics of emerald and beryl and ruby and diamond. Great masts of wood arose from ali sides of the building, from which festoons of flowers were suspended, crossing the building, or in time of rain, awnings of silk were suspended, the Colosseum having no roof. The outside wall was encrusted with marble and had four ranges, and the or hero. Into 180 feet of altitude soared the Colosseum. It glittered and and sunsets of dazzlement. After the

TALMAGE IN ROME. audience had assembled, aromatic liquids oozed from tubes distilled from pipes and rained gently on the multi-tudes, and filled the air with odors of hyacinth aud heliotrope and frankincense and balsam and myrrh and saffron, so that Lucan, the poet, says of

At once ten thousand saffron currents flow. And rain their odors on the crowd below. But where was the sport to come from? Well, I went into the cellars opening off from the arena, and I saw the places where they kept the hyenas and lions and panthers and wild boars and beastly violences of all sorts, with-out food or water until made fiery enough, for the arena, and I saw the underground rooms where the gladiators were accustomed to wait until the clapping of the people outside de-manded that they come forth armed to murder or to be murdered. All the arrangements were complete, as enough of the cellars and galleries still remain to indicate. What fun they must have had turning lions without food or drink for a week upon an unarmed disciple of Jesus Christ! At the dedication of this Colosseum 9,000 wild beasts and 10,000 immortal men were slain; so that the blood of men and beast was not a brook, but a river; not a pool, but a lake. Having been in that way dedicated, be not surprised when I tell you that Emperor Probus on one occasion throw into the occasion threw into that arena of the Colosseum a thousand stags, a thousand boars and a thousand ostriches. What fun it must have been! the sound of the trumpets, the roar of the wild beasts and the groans of the dying men! while in the gallery the wives and children of those down under the lion's paw wrung their hands and shrieked out in widowhood and orphanage, while one hundred thousand people clapped their hands and there was a "Ha! Ha!" wide as Rome and deep as perdition. The corpses of that arena were put on a cart or dragged by a hook out through what was called the Gate of Death. What an excitement it must have been when two combatants entered the arena, the one with sword and shield and the other with net and The swordsman strikes at the man with a net and spear; he dodges the sword, and then flings the net over the head of the swordsman and jerks him to the floor of the arena, and the man who flung the net puts his foot on the neck of the fallen swordsman, and, spear in hand, looks up to the galleries, as much as to say: "Shall I lot him are calculated." galleries, as much as to say: "Shall I let him up, or shall I plunge this spear into his body until he is dead?" The audience had two signs, either of which they might give. If they waved their flags, it meant spare the fallen con-testant. If they turned their thumbs down it meant slay him. Occasionally the audience would wave their flags and the fallen would be let up, but that was too tame sport for most occasions, and generally the thumbs from the galleries were turned down, and with that sign would be heard the accompanying shout of "Kill! Kill! Kill! Kill!" Yet it was far from being a mono tone of sport. for there was a change of program in that wondrous Colosseum. Under a strange and powerful machinery, beyond anything of modern invention, the floor of the arena would begin to rock and roll and then give away, and there would appear a lake of bright water, and on its banks trees would spring up rustling with foliage, and tigers appeared among the jungles, and armed men would come forth, and there would be a tiger hunt. Then, on the lake in the Colosseum, armed ships would float, and there would be a sea fight. What fun! What lots of fun! When pestilence came, in order to appease the gods, in this Colosseum a sacrifice would be made, and the people would throng that great amphitheater, shouting: "The Christians to the wild beasts," and there would be a crackling of human bones in the jaws of leonine ferocity.

But all this was to be stopped. By the outraged sense of public decency?
No. There is only one thing that has ever stopped cruelty and sin, and that is Christianity, and it was Christianity, whether you like its form or not, that stopped this massacre of centuries. One day while, in the Colosseum, a Roman victory was being celebrated, and one hundred thousand enraptured spectators were looking down upon two gladiators in the arena stabbing and slicing each other to death, an Asiatic monk by the name of Telemachus was so overcome by the cruelty that he leaped from the gallery into the arena and ran in between the two swordsmen, and pushed first one back and then the other back and broke up the contest Of course, the audience was affronted at having their sport stopped, and they hurled stones at the head of Telemachus until he fell dead in the arena. But when the day was passed and the passions of the people had cooled off, they deplored the martyrdom of the brave and Christian Telemachus, and as a result of the overdone cruelty, the human sacrifices of the Colosseum were forever abol-

What a good thing, say you, that such cruelties have ceased. My friends, the same spirit of ruinous amusements and of moral sacrifice is abroad in the world to-day although it takes other shapes. Last summer in our Southwest there occurred a scene of pugilism on which all Christendom ooked down, for I saw the papers on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean giving whole columns of it. Will ome one tell me in what respect that brutality of last summer was superior to the brutality of the Roman Colosseum? In some respects it was worse, by so much as the nineteenth century pretends to be more merciful and more decent than the fifth century. That pugilism is winning admiration country is positively proved by the fact that years ago such collision was reported in a half dozen lines of newspaper, if reported at all, and now it takes the whole side of a newspaper to tell what transpired between the first blood drawn by one loafer and the throwing up of the sponge by the other loafer, and it is not the newspaper's fault, for the newspapers give only what the people want, and when newspapers put carrion on your table, it is because you prefer carrion. The same spirit of brutality is seen today in many an ecclesiastical court when a minister is put on trial. Look at the countenances of the prosecuting ministers and not in all cases but in many cases, you will find nothing but diabolism inspires them. They let out on one poor minister who cannot defend himself, the lion of ecclesiasticism past, and how thankful modern and the tiger of bigotry and the wild centuries ought to be that the boar of jealousy, and if they can get persecution which reddened the the offending minister flat on his back, some one puts his feet on the of the overthrown Gospelizer and looks up, spear in hand, to see whether the galleries and ecclesiastics would have him let up or slain. And, lo! many of the thumbs are down.

In the worldly realms look at the brutalities of the presidential election eight years ago. Read the biographies of Daniel Webster and Alexander H. Stephens and Horace Greeley and Charles Sumner and Lucius Quintus Lamar and James G. Blaine, and if the story of defamation and calumny and scandalization and diatribe and scurrility and lampoon and billingsgate and damnable perfidy be accurately recorded, tell me in what respects our political arena and the howling and blaspheming galleries that again and again look down upon it are better than the Roman Colosseum. When I read a few days ago that the Supreme Court of the United States had appropriately adjourned to pay honors to the two last distin-guished men mentioned, and American journalism, North, South, East and West, went into lamentations over their departure and said all complimentary things in regard to them, I asked, When did the nation lie about these men? Was it when, during their life, it gave them malediction, or now, since their death, when bestowing upon them beatification. The same spirit of cruelty that you deplore in the Roman Colosseum is seen in the sharp appetite the world seems to have for the downfall of good men, and in the divorce of those whose marital life was thought accordant, and in the absconding of a bank cashier. Oh, my friends, the world wants more of the spirit of "Let-him-up," and less of the spirit of "Thumbs-down." There are hundreds of men in the prisons of America who ought to be discharged, because they were the victims of circumstances or have suffered enough. There are in ail professions and occupations, men who are domineered over by others and whose whole life is a strugple with monstrous opposition, and cirumstances have their heel upon the throbbing and broken hearts. For God's sake, let them up! Away with the spirit of "Thumbs-down!" What the world wants is a thousand men like Telemachus to leap out of the gallery into the arena, whether he be a Roman Catholic monk or a Methodist steward, or a Presbyterian elder, and go in between the contestants. "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God."

One-half the world is down and the other half is up, and the half that is up has its heel on the half that is down. If you, as a boss workman, or as a contractor, or as a Bishop, or as a State or national official, or as a potent factor in social life, or in any way are oppressing anyone, know that the same devil that possessed the Roman Colosseum oppresses you. The Diocletians are not all dead. The cellars leading into the arena of life's struggle are not all emptied of their tigers. The vivisection by young doctors of dogs vivisection by young doctors of dogs and cats and birds most of the time adds nothing to human discovery, but is only a continuation of Vespasian's Colosseum. The cruelties of the world generally begin in nurseries and in home circles and in day schools. The child that transfixes a fly with a pin, or the low feeling that sets two dogs into at bullies a weak oled playmate, or the indifference that tarves a canary bird, needs only to be developed in order to make a first-class or a full armed Apollyon. It would be a good sentence to be written on the top line of a child's book, and a fit inscription to be embroidered in the arm-chair of the sitting-room, and an appropriate motto for Judge, and jury, and District Attorney and Sheriff to look at in the court-house: "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy." And so the ruins of that Colosseum preach to me. Indeed the most impressive things on earth are ruins. The four greatest structures ever built are in ruins. The Parthenon in ruins. The Temple of Diana in ruins. The Temple of Jerusalem in ruins. The Colosseum in ruins. Indeed the earth itself will yet be a pile of ruins, the mountains in ruins, the seas in ruins, the cities in ruins, the hemispheres in ruins. Yea, further than that, all up and down the heavens are worlds burned up, worlds wrecked, worlds extinct, worlds abandoned. Worlds on worlds in ruins! But I am glad to say it is the same old heaven, and in all that world there is not one ruin and never will be a ruin. Not one of the pearly gates will ever become unhinged. Not one of the amethystine towers will ever fall. Not one of the mansions will ever decay. Not one of the chariots will ever be unwheeled. Not one of the thrones will ever rock down. Oh, make sure of heaven, for it is an everlasting Through Christ, the Lord, get ready for residence in the eternal palaces. The last evening before leaving Rome for Brindisi and Athens and Egypt and Palestine, I went alone to the Colosseum. There was not a living soul in all the immense area. Even those accustomed to sell curios at the four entrances of the building had gone away. The place was so over-whelmingly silent, I could hear my own heart beat with the emotions aroused by the place and hour. I paced the arena. I walked down into the dens where the hyenas were once kept. I ascended to the place where the Emperor used to sit. I climbed up on the galleries from which the mighty throngs of people had gazed in en-chantment. To break the silence, I shouted, and that seemed to awaken the echoes, echo upon echo. And those awakened echoes seemed to address me, saying: "Men die, but their work lives on. Gaundentius, the architect who planued this structure, the 60,000 enslaved Jews brought by Titus from Jerusalem and who toiled on these walls, the gladiators who fought in this arena, the Emperors and Empressess who had place on yonder platform, the millions who, during centuries, sat and rose in these galleries, have passed away, but enough of the Colosseum stands to tell the story of cruelty and pomp and power. Five hundred years of bloodshed." Then, as I stood there, there came to me another burst of echoes, which seemed throbbing with the prayers and songs and groans of Christians who had expired in that arena, and they seemed to say: "How much it cost to serve God in ages of this amphitheater abolished." And the sands been questioned the echoes, saying: "Where is Emperor Titus who sat here?" The answer came: "Gone to judgment." "Where is Emperor Trajan who sat here?" "Gone to judgment." "Where is Emperor Maximinus who sat here?" "Gone to judgment." "Where are all the multitudes who clapped and shouted and waved flags to let the vanquished up, or to have them slain, put thumbs down?" The echoes answered: "Gone to judgment." I inquired: "All?" And they answered: "All." And I looked up to the sky above the ruins, and it was full of clouds scur rying swiftly past, and those clouds seemed as though they had faces, and some of the faces smiled and some of them frowned, and they seemed to have wings, and some of the wings were moon-gilt and others thunder-charged, and the voices of those clouds overpowered the echoes beneath. "Behold he cometh with clouds and every eye shall see him." And as I stood looking up along the walls of the Colosseum, they rose higher and higher, higher and higher, until the amphitheater seemed to be filled with all the nations of the past and all the nations of the present and all the nations of the future, those who went down under the paws of wild beasts, and those who sat waving flags to let up the conquered, and those who held thumbs down to command their assassination, and small and great, and Emperor and slave, and pastor and people, and righteous and wicked, the amphitheater seeming to rise to infinite heights on all sides of me, and in the center of that amphi-theater, instead of the arena of the combatants, a great throne stood, ris-ing higher and higher, higher and higher, and on it sat the Christ for whom the martyrs died and against whom the Diocletians plotted their persecutions, and waving one hand toward the piled up splendors to the right of him, he cried: "Come, ye blessed," and waving the other hand toward the piled up glooms on the left of him, he cried: "Depart, ye cursed." And so the Colosseum of Rome that evening of 1889 seemed enlarged into the amphitheater of the Last Judgment, and I passed from under the arch of that mighty structure, mighty even in its ruins, praying to Almighty God, through Jesus Christ, for merey in that day for which all other days were made, and that as I expected mercy from God, I might exercise mercy toward others. and have more and more of the spirit of "Let-him-up" and less and less of the spirit of "Thumbs-down." We may not all be able to do a sum in higher mathematics, but there is a sum in the first rule of Gospel arithmetic which we all may do. It is a sum in simple addition. "Add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, a and to brotherly kindness

How Teeth Grow.

An eminent dentist is authority for the following: "It would take too long to describe the formation of the teeth, but it may interest you to know that the enamel is derived in the first place from the epithel gum, or scarf skin, and is, in fact, modified skin, while the dentine, of which the bulk of the tooth is composed, is derived from the mucus layer below the epithe lium. Lime salts are slowly deposited, and the tooth pulp, or nerve, is the last remains of what was once a pulpy mass of the shape of the future tooth and even the tooth pulp in the old people sometimes gets quite obliterated by calcarous deposits. The thirty-two permanent teeth are pre-ceded by twenty temporary deciduous or milk teeth. These are fully erupted at about two to two and one-half years old, and at about six years of age a wonderful absorption sets in, by which the roots of the temporary teeth are removed to make room for the advancing permanent ones. The crowns of the former, having no support, become loose and fall away. One would naturally suppose that the advancing permanent toothwas a powerful factor in the absorption of its temporary predecessor, but we have many facts to prove it has no influence whatever; indeed, the interesting phenomena of the eruption and succession of teeth are very little unders tood. I may remark in passing, that a child of six, who has not yet lost any temporary teeth, has in its jaws, either erupted or non-erupted, no less than fifty-two ceeth, more or less formed.

Coal and Cold Weather.

A careful and prolonged series of experiments made in Germany appear to furnish absolute proof that coal suffers an important loss by continued exposure to the weather. Anthracite and cannel suffer least, but ordinary bituminous coal depreciates nearly one-third in weight and nearly onehalf in gas-making property after long exposure. Weather waste of soft coals is therefore always to be taken into account in establishments where a large amount of coal is required. The loss is believed to come from a slow oxidation that takes place, the consequence being the practical burning of a portion of the coal in the pile, and the result is a lessened heating capacity.

"OUT OF THY LIFE,"

"Out of thy life," could I but find Where the waters of Lethe run, Like some pilgrim of old without silver or gold, I would journey from sun to sun.

In quest of that font I hath not seen, Yet fabled in song and prose. But with waters as sweet and limpid, I ween, As dew on the heart of a rose. I would fourney unaided save by the stars, Scarce pausing to break my fast, O'ercoming all my progress bars, I would drink and forget at last.

OF JOHN NICHOLSON

BY ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

CHAPTER II-CONTINUED. He was a young man on whom, at the highest point of lovely exaltation, there had fallen a blow too sharp to be supported alone; and not many hundred yards away his greatest friend was sitting at suppor; aye, and even expecting him. Was it not in the pature of men that he should away. the nature of man that he should run there? He went in quest of sympathy -in quest of that droll article that we all suppose ourselves to want when in a strait, and have agreed to call advice; and he went, besides, with vague but rather splendid expectations of relief. Alan was rich, or would be so when he came of age. By a stroke of the pen he might remedy this misfortune, and avert that dreaded interview with Mr. Nicholson, from which John now shrunk in imagination as the hand draws back from fire.

Close under the Calton Hill there street, part by-road. The head of it faces the doors of the prison; its tail descends into the sunless slums of Low Calton. On one hand it is overhung by the crags of the hill; on the other by an old graveyard. Between these two the roadway runs in a trench, sparsely lighted at night, sparsely frequented by day and bordered, when it was cleared the place tombs, by dingy and ambiguous houses. One of these was the house of Colette, and at his door our illstarred John was presently beating gratified the inquiries of the contraband hotel-keeper; in an evil hour he penetrated into a somewhat unsavory ("Well," said the father, with an interior. Alan, to be sure, was there, seated in a room lighted by noisy gasjets, beside a dirty table-cloth, engaged on a coarse meal, and in the company of several tipsy members of I've been robbed of it!" the junior bar. But Alan was not sober; he had lost a thousand pounds on a horse-race, had received "Robbed? Be careful what you say, the news at dinner-time, and was now. John!" in default of any possible means of extrication, drowning the memory of his predicament. He to help John! desperation, sullenly. The thing was impossible; he couldn't help himself.

"If you have a beast of a father," said he, "I can tell you I have a brute of a trustee. "I'm not going to hear my father called a beast," said John, with a beating heart, feeling that he risked the last sound rivet of the chain that bound him to life. But Alan was quite good-natured. "All right, old fellow," said he. 'Mos' respec'able man, your father." And he introduced his friend to his companions as "old Nicholson, the what-d'ye-call-um's son." John sat in dumb agony. Colette's foul walls and maculate table linen, and even down to Colette's villainous casters, seemed like objects in a a knock and a scurrying; the police, nightmare. And just then there came so lamentably absent from the Calton Hill, appeared upon the scene, and the party, taken flagrante delicto, with their glasses at their elbow, were seized, marched up to the police office, and all duly summoned to appear as witnesses in the subsequent case against the arch-shebeener, Colette.

It was a sorrowful and a mightily sobered company that came forth again. The vague terror of public opinion weighed generally on them all; but there were private and particular horrors on the minds of individuals. Alan stood in dread of his trustee, already sorely tried. One of the group was a son of a country minister, another of a judge; John, the unhappiest of all, had David Nicholson to father, the idea of facing whom on such a scandalous subject was physically sickening. They stood awhile consulting under the buttresses of Saint Giles; thence they adjourned to the lodgings of one of the number in North Castle street, where, for that matter, they might have had quite as good a supper, and far better drink, than in the dangerous paradise from which they had been routed. There, over an almost tearful glass, they debated their position. Each explained he had the world to lose if the affair went on, and he appeared as a witness. It was remarkable what bright prospects were just then in the act of opening before each of that little company of youths, and what pious consideration for the feelings of their families began now to well from them. Each, moreover, was in an odd state of des-Mrs. Coville writes: "I had suffered ter- titution. Not one could bear his a wonderful twinkle of hope that each of the others (in succession) was the very man who could step in to make good the deficit. One took a high hand; he could not pay his share; if it went to a trial, he should bolt; he had always felt the English bar to be his true sphere. Another branched out into touching details about his family, and was not listened to. John, in the midst of this disorderly competition of poverty and meanness, sat stunned, contemplating the mountain bulk of his misfortune.

At last, upon a pledge that each should apply to his family with a common frankness, this convention of unhappy young asses broke up, went down the common stair, and in the gray of the spring morning, with the streets lying dead empty all about them, the lamps burning on into the daylight in diminished lustre, and the birds beginning to sound premonitory notes from the groves of the town gardens, went each his own way, with bowed head and echoing footfall.

The rooks were awake in Randolph Crescent; but the windows looked down, discreetly blinded, on the return of the prodigal. John's pass key was a recent privilege; this was the first time it had been used; and, oh! with what a sickening sense of his unworthiness he now inserted it into the well-oiled lock and entered that the gas in the hall had been left faintly burning to light his return; a dreadful stillness reigned, broken by "Well," said the old gentleman at the deep ticking of the eight-day clock. He put the gas out, and sat on a chair in the hall, waiting and | ing what the world calls a happy man counting the minutes, longing for any human countenance. But when at I thought I could be reasonably counting the minutes, longing for any last he heard the alarm spring its rattle in the lower story, and the servants begin to be about, he instantly lost heart and fled to his own room, where he threw himself upon

CHAPTER III. In Which John Enjoys the Harvest

Home. Shortly after breakfast, at which he assisted with a highly tragical countenance,, John sought his father where he sat, presumably in religious meditation on the Sabbath mornings. The old gentleman looked up with runs a certain narrow avenue, part | that sour, inquisitive expression that came so near to smiling and was so different in effect.

"This is a time when I do not like to be disturbed," he said.

"I know that," returned John, "but I have—I want—I've made a dreadful mess of it," he broke out, and turned to the window.

Mr. Nicholson sat silent for an appreciable time, while his unhappy son surveyed the poles in the back green, and a certain yellow cat that was perched upon the wall. Despair sat upon John as he gazed; and he raged for admittance. In an evil hour he to think of the dreadful series of his misdeeds, and the essential innocence

Mr. Nicholson drew in his breath. "And how came the money in your hands at twelve last night?" he asked, sharply.

"I neglected that piece of business," said John, anticipating comment; and then in his own dialect: "I clean forgot all about it." "Well," said his father, "it's a most extraordinary story. Have you communicated with the police."

"I have," answered poor John, the blood leaping to his face. "They think they know the man that did it. I dare say the money will be re-covered, if that was all," said he, with a desperate indifference, which his father set down to levity; but which sprung from the consciousness of worse behind.

"Your mother's watch, too?" asked Mr. Nicholson.

"Oh, the watch is all right," cried John. "At least, I mean I was coming to the watch—the fact is, I am ashamed to say, I-I had pawned the watch before. Here is the ticket; they didn't find that; the watch can be redeemed; they don't sell pledges." The lad panted out these phrases, one after another, like minute guns; but at the last word, which rang in that stately chamber like an oath, his heart failed him utterly; and the dreaded silence settled on father and son. It was broken by Mr. Nicholson picking up the pawn ticket: "John Froggs, 85 Pleasance," he read, and then, turning upon John with a brief flash of passion and disgust, "Who is John Froggs?" he cried.

"Nobody," said John. "It was just a name."

"An alias," his father commented. "Oh! I think scarcely quite that," said the culprit; "it's a form, they all do it, the man seemed to understand, we had a great deal of fun over the name"-

He paused at that, for he saw his father wince at the picture like a man physically struck; and again there was

"I do not think," said Mr. Nicholson, at last, "that I a man ungenerous father. I have never grudged you money within reason, for any avowable purpose; you have just to come to me and speak: And now I find that you have forgotten all decency and all natural feeling, and actually pawned — pawned — your mother's watch. You must have had some temptation; I will do you the justice to suppose it was a strong one. What did you want with this money?

"I would rather not tell you," said John. "It will only make you angry." "I will not be fenced with," cried his father. "There must be an end of disingenuous answers. What did you want with this money?"

"To lend it to Houston, sir," says John.

"I thought I had forbidden you to speak to that young man?" asked his

"Yes, sir," said John, "but I only met him." . "Where?" came the deadly ques-

"In a billiard room," was the lamning answer. Thus, had damning answer. Thus, John's single departure from the truth brought instant punishment. For no other purpose but to see Alan would he have entered a billiard room; but he had desired to palliate the fact of his disobedience, and now it happened that he frequented these disreputable haunts upon his own account.

Once more Mr. Nicholson digested the vile tidings in silence, and when citadel of the proprieties! All slept; John stole a glance at his father's countenance he was abashed to see last, "I cannot pretend not to be simply bowed down. I rose this mornproud"-

But it was beyond human nature to endure this longer, and John interrupted almost with a scream. "Oh, wheest!" he cried. "That's not all! That's not the worst of it! It's nothing! How could I tell you were proud of me? Oh! I wish, I wish that I had known! But you always said that I was such a disgrace! And the dreadful thing is this: We were all taken up last night, and we have to pay Colette's fine among the six, or we'll be had up for evidence-shebeening it is. They made me swear to tell you. But for my part," he cried, bursting into tears, "I wish that I was dead!" and he fell on his knees before a chair and hid his face.

Whether his father spoke, and whether he remained long in the room, or at once departed, are points lost to history. A horrid turmoil of mind and body; bursting sobs; broken, vanishing thoughts, now of indignation, now of remorse; broken elementary whiffs of consciousness, of the smell of the horse-hair on the chair bottom; of the jangling of church bells that now began to make day horrible throughout the confines of the city; of the hard floor that bruised his knees; of the taste of tears that found their way into his mouth; for a period of time, the duration of which I can not guess, while I refuse to dwell longer on its agony, these were the whole of God's world for John Nichol-

When at last, as by the touching of a spring, he returned again to clearness of consciousness and even a measure of composure, the bells had but just done ringing, and the Sabbath silence was still marred by the patter of belated feet. By the clock above the fire, as well as by these more speaking signs, the service had not long begun; and the unhappy sinner, if his father had really gone to church, might count on near two hours of only comparative unhappiness. With his father, the superlative degree returned infallibly. He knew it by every shrinking fiber in his body; he knew it by the sudden dizzy whirling of his brain, at the mere thought of that calamity. An hour and a half, perhaps an hour and three-quarters, if the doctor was long-winded, and then would begin again that active agony from which, even in the dull ache of the present, he shrank as from the bite of fire. He saw, in a vision, the family pew, the somnolent cushions, the Bibles, the psalm books Maria with her smelling salts, his father sitting spectacled and critical, and at once he was struck with indignation, not unjustly. It was inhuman to go off to church, and leave a sinner in suspense, unpunished, unforgiven. And at the very touch of criticism, the paternal sanctity was lessened; yet the paternal terror only grew, and the two strands of feeling pushed him in the same direction.

Jenny Lind's Benevolence. The Century is printing a series of papers on Notable Women. We quote from the paper on "Jenny Lind: "The entire proceeds of the American tour, amounting to more than £20,-000, were devoted by Jenny Lind to various benevolent objects. From the days of her early girlhood it had been her chief delight to use for the good of others the wealth which her genius had brought her. She was ever ready to sing for a hospital, or a college, or a poor fellow-artist, or for the chorus, or chestra, or scene-shifters of the theaters where she appeared. Is it not beautiful that I can sing so? she exclaimed when she was told that a large number of children would be saved from wretchedness by a concert she had given for their benefit. The volumes which contain such a record might well bear the label which Jenny Lind's old Swedish guardian placed around the packet containing her letters to him, 'The mirror of a noble soul."

DIED-On Monday, the three year-old funeral was held in the M. E. Church on Wednesday, conducted by the pastor. Undertaker McKenzie was in attendance.

There are three important times in a man's life-when he is born, when he marries and when he dies. But even then his personal importance is overshadowed by the curiosity to know whether he is a boy or a girl, what the bride wore and how much he left in his will.

CARD OF THANKS-The undersigned wishes hereby to express his heartfelt gratitude to the friends and neighbors who showed their sympathy in such a practical manner to himself and children at the time of their loss of a wife and A. A. P. McDowell.

DIED.—At his home in Cass City, on Friday last, Mr. George Scripture, aged 63 years. The remains were buried in the Cumber cemetery on Sunday, Undertaker McKenzie having charge of the remains. The funeral sermon will be preached in the M. E. Church, Sunday, Bros.' Feb. 26. Mr. Scripture had lived in this vicinity for about six years.

The good people of modern times don't seem to be good to their Presidents. They wear the life out of them. The statistics show that the average age of the ten presidents last deceased was at the time of their death 62 years, as against 81 years, the average age at death of the first eight presidents of the republic. This, too, in the face of the fact that the average of human life in the past twenty-five years has increased 5 per cent.

Attorney-General Ellis says in regard to the spring elections: That it will be necessary for two tickets to be printed, and two separate ballot boxes provided, One ticket, he ays, should contain the names of the several candidates for the offices of justice of the supreme court, regents of the university, circuit judge and county commissioners of schools, and should be prepared by the county board of election commissioners, The other should be the regular township or city ticket, prepared by the election commissioners of the township or city.

"Govern Yourselves."

The profoundest advice heard by the French nation in many a year was given in the angry exclamation of the late premier, M. Loubet, at the time of his sudden resignation. "I have nothing more to say to you," he exclaimed to the chamber of deputies. "Govern yourselves!" Then he shook the dust of the chamber off his feet and departed.

If the politicians of France had learned twenty years ago to govern themselves, not exactly perhaps in the sense which M. Loubet meant, but in the true sense, France would have been more prosperous and more at peace internally than she is today. If the greed, vanity, ambition, fussy passion and jealousy which keep French politics in a broil could be stifled in each individual breast, then France would go on to glory in a manner unsurpassed even by her sister republic of the United States.

The reason why it is charged that the Latin races cannot maintain a republic permanently lies exactly in this want of individual self government. The Anglo-Saxon is supposed to be able to control himself in a much greater degree than the French, Spaniard or Italian, but even the cold blooded Anglo-Saxon has not touched the boundary line of the power that will be his when he learns to do what Loubet told the French chamber to do-govern himself. For this is the source of all power over others.
