To Correspondents:

Being aware of the fact that the correspondents of the Enterprise are anxious to shake hands with one another, we have arranged for such a meeting. Accordingly, all are invited to this office on Thursday forenoon, Sept. 21, (the third day of the Fair), where an informal meeting of the "brethern" will take place. At 11 o'clock a. m., all will dine with the ENTERPRISE at the Tennant House, after which tickets of admission to the Fair Grounds and badges will be furnished correspondents. DeWitt, furniture dealer, and propose to present it to the correspondent securing the largest list of new, yearly cash subscribers, (providing the list amounts to at least six in number), the contest to close at 2 o'clock p.m. on the last day of the Fair.

The desk is mahogany finish, stands feet high, is 2½ feet wide, 16 inches deep, contains three commodious drawers, eleven pigeon holes, three apartments for books and a small inside drawer. The desk is of the dropleaf pattern, closes up and locks.

Game of Cards Causes a Murder at Lan ing-Double Murder in the U. P .-State Tax Apportionment.

Sad Murder at Lansing.

Byron M. Browne, an old and wellknown resident of Lansing, shot and killed Montgomery Hendershott in a quarrel over a poker game. The shooting took place in Browne's room over William Lead's saloon, next door to police headquarters, Lansing, and the only witnesses were Fred Carr and a young man named Hernley. They are very reticent regarding the murder, and all that is known is that trouble arose over a game of cards and ended two blocks away, and threw his revolver into the water. He then returned to his room, where he was promptly arrested. The bullet passed through Hendershott's stomach and he died in about twenty minutes.

All four of the men who were in the room had been drinking, and there are indications that fighting preceded 'the murder, as Browne has a badly bruised

Head Crushed Between Logs.

A car load of logs on a logging train at Louis Sand's mill at Lake City appeared shaky, and the men at the rollway were warned about it. Charles Erickson approached the car cautiously to loosen the binding chain. As h reached the car C. A. Sands, general manager of the business at that place, who was standing near by, noticed the top log start to roll, and shouted to Erickson to come back. The latter apparently did not hear, but went on a step or two, when he saw the log coming and jumped for the water as the best method of escape. In making the jump his foot slipped and he fell with his head on a log, when the falling log came down upon it, crushing the head into a shapeless mass and causing in-

Hanged by a Most Extraordinary Accident William Ross, a well-known young man about 25 years of age, living in North Plains township, Ionia county, met death in a most peculiar manner. The young man had climbed nearly to the top of a tree about 70 feet high to cut down some bees which he had discovered there. As an extra precaution against falling he tied the end of a long rope tightly about his body and fastened the other end to a neighboring branch. All went well until the limb which he was sawing and on which the bees had taken refuge, broke loose and fell. In falling it ac cidentally twisted the rope around the young man's neck and broke it before aid could reach him. He died in a very

CONGRESSIONAL NEWS.

SENATE.—Twenty-first day—After several petitions, for and against repeal, had been presented, the House bill to repeal the Sherman law was taken up, and Mr. Sherman proceeded to address the Senate upon the measure. He defended the Sherman law, because at the time of its passage it was a compromise between two bills which would have brought greater disaster to the country. However, he was now of the opinion that the country's prosperity would be better promoted by the repeal of the measure; in fact, he had long ago introduced a bill for relief containing almost the same words as the bill only recently introduced by Mr. Voorhees, but those who are so eager to vote for the latter were its bit terest enemies. Mr. Sherman defended the congress which, in 1873, passed what is called the act demonetizing silver. It had been said that Ernest Seyd, the great English economist, bribed that congress with $500,000 to demonetize silver. Mr. Sherman classed such charges as utterly false. Mr. Sherman spoke for two hours and a half and the heartily applauded at his conclusion. Mr. Teller finished his speech of the previous day on the national bank circulation bill and after a short executive session the Senate adjourned. House.—Rules were discussed but no action was taken. The urgent deficiency appropriation bill (which appropriates $50,000) was passed. Adjourned. SENATE.-Twenty-first day-After several urgent deficiency appropriation bill (which appropriates $303,000) was passed. Adjourned.

Senate.—Twenty-second day. Mr. Cockreil introduced a concurrent resolution directing the secretary of the treasury to issue certificates not to exceed 20 per cent of the amount of gold coin and bullion in the treasury, and to use and expend the same in payment of interest on the public debt, or any other demand, liability or obligation of the United States. He said that the passage of the concurrent resolution would allow the issue of from $25,000,000 to $55,000,000 in gold certificates. The resolution was laid on the table. The Fouse bill of repeal of the Sherman law was the order, and Mr. Wolcott, of Colorado. addressed the Senate in opposition to it. The speech was full of sharp witticisms and sarcasm directed at those senators who had changed from bimetallists to monometallists, or whose views while apparently in the interest of silver were quite the oppolite. Mr. Wolcott held strictly to the silver argument and made many good points. Mr. Calfery, of Louistana. successor to the late Senator Gibson, followed Mr. Wolcott in an argument for the repeal bill. It was his maiden speech in the Senate and was a very good effort. Resolutions expressing sorrow at the death of Representative siutchler, of Pennsylvania, were agreed to, and as a further mark of respect the Senate adjourned. House—The silver men stole a march on their opponent and gained a victory which makes it impossible for the gold men to impede the consideration of bimetallic or other inancial legislation that may be reported by the committees on coinage or banking and currency during the coming session. The time-honored custom in the House has been to make the reports of comultices on appropriations and ways and means privileged matters at all times and when the new rules were being considered Mr. pringer. chairman of the committee on banking and currency, suddenly sprang an amendment extending the same favoritism to the committee on banking and currency can e

Senate.—Twenty-third day.—A resolution was agreed to calling upon the secretary of the treasury for a statement of the aggregate amount, of silver bullion purchased, with the date and price during August, under the Sherman law; together with the date and price of all silver bullion offered. Mr. Vance, of North Carolina, addressed the Senate in opposition to the repeal of the Sherman law. He was earnestly listened to by both the Democrat and Republican members and although the thoughts presented were not entirely new they were clothed in words which made them seem original. Mr. Vance began his speech with the statement that the great law of supply and demand operated in regard to money just as it did to everything else; when money was abundant prices were high; when it was scarce the prices of all products were low. Therefore, he that increased the abundance of money benefited production and enhanced prices and wages, and he that contracted or diminished the amount of this money depreciated everything that is for sale, including wages, though by reason of combinations and defensive measures in many parts of the world, wages are affected less than products. The effect upon the condition of mankind which would follow the destruction of one-half the currency of the world ithe demonetization of silver!, amounting the demonstration of silver, amounting n the aggregate to $7,500,000,000, it would be the demonetization of silver], amounting in the aggregate to $7,390,30,000, it would be impossible accurately to describe. Still this process of destruction has been going quietly on since 1872, and its result is seen in prices lower in many things than has ever been known in the memory of man. Mr. Cockrell, of Missouri, interjected a statement of the production and coinage of gold and silver from 1873 to 1892 which showed a production of gold amounting to $2,787,714,679; of silver the production was $2,-20,070,053, while the coinage amounted to $2,787,714,679; of silver the production was $2,322,603,-351. There being a lapse in the speechmaking Mr. Voorhees moved for a vote to substitute the bill reported from the Senate finance committee for the House repeal bill This brought up an argument as to their relutive merits and a passage-at-arms between Messrs. Aldrich and Cockrell as to the standing of their respective parties, which was cut off by an executive session being called. Adjourned. House.—The rules of debate was continued without much progress being made.

Senate.—Twenty-fourth day.—Mr. Palmer presented a resolution for the election of Senators by direct vote of the people: referred. The repeal bill was taken up; but was laid aside to allow Mr. Dolph to make an address in advocacy of the bill introduced by him appropriating $500,000 to enable the secretary of the treasury in enforcing the Chinese exclusion law. There was some discussion of the measure, and it was referred to the committee on foreign relations. The debate on the repeal bill was resumed. Mr. Voorhees gave notice that he would ask for a vote on the question of longer daily sessions of the Senate. Executive session. Adjourned. HOUSE.—Mr. McLaurin, of South Carolina, made an attempt to get in a bill authorizing the issue of $125,000,000 treasury notes under the act of '63, but an ob ection was made and it fell. The rules of debate continued and was very warm, a lively tilt between Mr. Mc willin and Gen. Catchings being particularly interesting. An amendment to make it necessary for seven members to make an objection before business could be blocked—now it requires only one objection—was lost. Mr. Tracey, of New York, offered an amendment striking out the clause in rule 21, permitting amendments to general appropriation bills when those amendments are in the interest of retrenchment of expenditures. This was so vizorously opposed that Mr. Tracey withdrew the amendment. Mr. Kyle, of Mississippi, ofered an amendment increasing the number of members constituting a quorum of the committee of the whole House to a majority of the members of the House. Under the rules, 100 members are made a quorum in committee of the whole. Without action upon the amendment. SENATE.—Twenty-fourth day.—Mr. Pal-ner presented a resolution for the election

THE NEWS IN GENERAL.

IRISH HOME RULE BILL PASSES THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Electric Cars Loaded With Passengers Dash Down a Hill at Awful Speed to Death and Destruction.

London cable: Mr. Gladstone's long home rule fight in the house of commons is ended. The bill was passed at 1 o'clock in the morning by 301 to 267. It was hurried to the house of lords, which gave it the first reading and adjourned

Mr. Gladstone's journey from his residence to the house of commons was a triumphal journey, the streets being crowded with cheering multi-tudes. The galleries of the house were crowded also, and the members were early in their seats. The debate was continued by Justin McCarthy, and John Morley, chief secretary of Ireland, spoke for the bill, while Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Balfour, each in lengthy brilliant speeches, opposed the measure. A division was had upon Mr. Courtney's amendment to reject the bill and the amendment was defeated. The bill was then put on its third reading and was passed by a vote

The full import of the occasion was felt by the spectators and by the government adherents and the culmination of the work in the house was accompanied by rounds of frantic cheers from the galleries and upon the floor. When the announcement that the louse had passed the home rule bill by a vote of 301 to 267 was received by the crowd outside they went wild. They cheered, shouted, sang, embraced one another, smashed hats and did other absurd things to show their appreciation of the house's action.

A MILE A MINUTE.

Electric Street Cars Carry Passenger

Down a Hill to Death. On the electric railway from Avon dale to Cincinnati, all the brakes of an in-coming train of two cars gave way simultaneously at McGregor avenue on Hunt street. For a mile and a quarter from this point the road is lown grade. It makes a long curve before intersecting with Broadway, which street it enters at right angles. The grade for four hundred yards fore entering Broadway is five or six feet to the hundred. The motor man when the brakes failed tried to reverse the wheels, but the wires of the controller burned off, and the motor man conductor and forty-five passsengers were at the mercy of that wild train.

Swifter and swifter sped the two fated cars; louder and more despairing grew the screams. Around the great bend the train shot at 50 miles an hour with speed accelerating every second. Into Broadway it dashed at 70 miles an hour. Tearing across the street it struck a big cedar telegraph pole out of the lower part of which it cut a log. After cutting through the pole the great iron frame of the car went on and struck a huge iron door post in the building at the corner, split upon it and thrust half the length of the car into the building. Over this mass of pulverized ruin the rear car leaped to destruction. All around in this heap of confusion were scattered the dead and dving human freight. So far as can be learned not a soul escaped. One was instantly killed and 18 were either fatally or seriously injured.

20,000 WORKERS MARCHED.

They took undispated possession of such Detroit thoroughfares as they could use and assumed control of Belle Isle without a protest. There were more than 20,000 procession and easily 50,000 at the exercises at Belle Island park.

The day was decidedly pleasant and was hugely enjoyed. There were Sunday school drum corps, bands, uniformed cadets, pretty children by the thousands with their parents and teachers. The procession from Grand Circus park to the boats and Lefferson street cars was three hours from the head to the end. At Belle 35 tents had been spread lunches, etc., and Mayor Isle for Pingree, Rev. Henderson, of the University of Chicago, and others addressed assembled children. There were prize drills by the cadets, ball games, foot races, bicycle races, swimming races, boat races and many other athletic games which filled out a day of grand emjoyment for both large

LATE CONGRESSIONAL.

Senate.—Twenty-fifth day.—The House to the resolution making September 18 the centennial anniversary of the laying of the contension of the Capitol a holiday in Washington, was passed. Petitions were presented for the repeal bill and some against it unless a substitute was also passed. Mr. Butler, of South Carolina, submitted an amendment to the repeal bill, removing the tax on state bank circulation, provided such banks secure their circulation by coin, or approved state or municipal bonds. Mr. Gallinger, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill supplemental to the pension act of June 27, 1890. The most important provision of the bill is that, except in cases of established fraud, no pension shall be suspended until after ninety days' notice given to the pensioner and after a full and impartial investigation had upon sworn testimony. Mr. Gallinger said the bill was designed to remove every possible difficulty that stood in the way of the administration of the act of 1890, and to secure its administration precisely as Congress intended it should be. At the conclusion of his remarks the bill was referred to the committee on pensions. Mr. Allen, Pop., Neb., offered a resolution "that Congress take cognizance of the labor organizations and industrial interests of the nation by observing this day as a national holiday known as Labor Day, and that as a mark of respect to those interests the Senate do now adjourn." Mr. Voorhees opposed the resolution and it was defeated. Mr. Allen submitted a resolution directing the secretary of the treasury to furnish information as to whether that department had at any time redeemed any silver or coin certificates in silver coin as provided by the Sherman act; second, what amount in coinage in the discretion of the secretary of the treasury remains uncoined, and why such bullion has not been coined and paid out in accordance with the provisions of the act; and whether any part, and if so, what part of the paper money redeemed in gold by the Treasury Department since March 3, 1893, was

WEEKLY TRADE REVIEW.

New York, Sept. 4.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade: Money markets throughout the country are more healthy, fallures diminish in number, and resumption by a number of banks and other establishments illustrates the general tendency toward revival of confidence. Manufacturers do not yet feel the upward impulse, and exhibit on the whole rather less signs of improvement than a week ago. The record of the week has been mainly one of satisfactory progress toward recovery. Wheat was affected to some extent by the Vienna report, though it was presently realized that the estimates as to this country Vienna report, though it was presently realized that the estimates as to this country were no more reliable than those of the department, and that the estimate as a whole gave no assurance that the heavy surplus of old wheat would be required. Corn yielded a little with more satisfactory crop reports, but in spite of better advices from the more important cotton producing states the price of that staple was advanced &c. The industrial situation mends but little. The signs of improvement observed a week ago are scarcely sustained, for while twelve textile and thirteen iron and steel concerns have resumed after stoppage, fifth-five textile and therefore, in addition thirteen others have reduced working force, and a large number of works, including most of those at Fall River, have reduced wages from 10 to 20 per cent. A more cheerful tone is seen in Iron and steel markets, but nevertheless prices do not improve, nor are orders sufficient to encourage general resumption of work. The anxiety about money has been greatly relieved and scarcely any premium is now paid for currency, partly because many concerns which required cash for payment of hands have stoppedf while many others are using checks and other substitutes for cash. The number of cash for payment of hands have stopped, while many others are using checks and other substitutes for cash. The number of failures reported during the past week in the United States is 356, against 145 the same week last year, and in Canada 29, against 28 leaf year. last year.

DICKENS' MR. MICAWBER

MODELED AFTER THE FATHER OF THE NOVELIST.

It Was Not a Carleature, But an Exact Copy of His "Awful Dad"-The Elder Dickens' Odd Views of Pecuniary Transactions-A Naive Epistle.

This fresh and diverting character was, as we know, modeled directly from nature, says Percy Fitzgerald in the Illustrated London News, and Dickens indeed might have answered -as Sam did Justice Stareleigh-"I rayther think it's my father!" Sam was threatened with committal if he did not point his parent out, but everybody can point to John Dickens, "member of the gallery," as the original of this sketch. It used to be said that Mr. Micawber was a caricature, much overdrawn, not resembling anything we are likely to encounter in life. The truth is the portrait was an exact copy, and, if anything, fell rather short of the original. The delightful portion of him was not his odd, fantastic speeches and quaint formulas, so much as the character, exhibited chiefly in odd views of pecuniary tund and flowing phraseology, and the setting forth in a stately style his own indebtedness.

As a letter writer Mr. Micawber, we know, reveled in such flourishings, and his most amusing peculiarities were exhibited when he found himself seated at his desk. In one or two places in his letters Dickens speech or two of his sire, which might have been appropriately put into the mouth of Mr. Micawber. These paternal utterances the son relished hugely, and even reveled in. I have never hitherto seen a letter of the real John Dickens to put beside one of the racy epistles given in the novels. By a rare chance, however, one of these documents lately came into my possession. Nothing more "characteristical," as Elia has it, could be desired, and I am certain all lovers of "Boz" will welcome with pleasure the epistolary specimen of this choice character:

Do not suppose I ask this on any other footing than that of an act of obligation conferred on me, and I assure you, though small in amount its effects to me are matters of grave considera-tion, because anything that should occasion my absence from my duties in the gallery would be productive of fatal effects.

You may consider it an intrusion that I should apply to you in a moment of difficulty; and I feel it to be so: but recollecting how your interests are bound up with those of my son, I flatter myself if you can confer a favor upon the father without transgressing any rule that you have laid down, and without inconvenience, you may feel disposed to do so. I do not enhance it when I say that the favor, though small in amount, yet under the circumstances would be signal obligation con-Gentlemen, your obliged and obedient ser-

This is a wish. This is a richly characteristic production and has the true Micawberian flavor. There is nothing better in the povel than the proposal of the bill. The writer, it will be seen. owes the firm £4, and he asks them to "do him the favor" to deduct this sum from the rather problematic bill. and then—what is the point of the whole-"let him have the balance, £15 15s"-a delightful method of discharging his debt and incurring a new and more substantial one. "A moment of some. difficulty" and the "withdrawal from the gallery," which would have "fatal effects," are equally characteristic. Notable, too, is the hint as to the paper in question not being likely met" or "taken up," for he throws out that it is "an act of obligation conferred on me;" as well as the more significant hint that their "interests are bound up with those of my son." This seems to have had its effect, for we find the minutely calculated interest on the bill-"fore shillings"-altered in another hand and in a different ink to "3s. 4d." A pleasant touch is the iteration of the point of "inconvenience" to themselves, as though this were the only objection that could reasonably be presented by the firm, who would otherwise, he assumed be eager to honor his paper. The displayed flourish at the close-"signal obligation conferred on, Gentlemen, your Esq.," in the writer's own hand, which seems mysterious; it looks as though it had been returned to him. Fond as we are of Dickens curios 1 doubt if there could be found any more quaintly attractive than this letter of Micawber-Dickens. As it hangs framed it seems to have a sort of vitality—to have flesh and blood. We hear the rolling accents and flourishes, the appeals and explanations to Traddles and Copperfield. "That bill, sir, will not be met," has

of Mr. Micawber's. The letter is in-

The filings oxidized so deal of picturesque indignation that rapidly as to become so intensely heated as to set fire to the neighboring woodwork, and the factory was burned to the ground. In the other case, during a fire, water from the engines found its way into a shed containing quick lime. The heat generated by the lime set fire to the shed and the flames spread to other buildings.

"That is a glorious idea, Maggie," he replied. "I will. You are so quick and clever, you are sure to make rapid progress. But where shall I see you? I cannot stay at Hatton after Lord Stanleigh is gone.' Her beautiful eyes were looking into his, her lovely rose-flushed face nestled nearer to him, her hands met round his neck. "Carlos," she whispered, 'do not leave me again. I love you so much that if anything parted us now I should die. Do not leave me. I have a presentiment that if you do your mother will part us. Oh, Carlos, do not leave me, now that I have learned to love you with all my heart!" 'Do you love me with all your hourt Maggie?' he asked.

"Do I!" she echoed; and she was by no means reticent in her expressions of affection for him.

He was young, open to flattery and madly in love. He f rgot everything except that he loved this beautiful girl who clung to him with such passionate prayers and tears. He promised that he would never leave her

We will spend six months abroad and during that time I will finish your education. I will teach you all those little niceties which I suppose my mother considers a part of a woman's high training. At the end of six months I will take you to her and when she sees the improvement she will be anxious for me to marry you. Then we can show her how true our love was, how well it has stood the test, and she will en-and Lady Carew would never dream of such a thing as a secret marriage, while, as for John Waldron if he thought his daughter safe, he would not bestir himself. There was indeed. thought Sir Carlos, nothing to fear. "Tell your father that you as not like country life," he said, 'and that you will try to get a situation in London. I can arrange for letters to be forwarded to him at intervals, and he will not know but that you are there. We will be married in London by special license, Maggie, and I will take you to Paris. No, not to Paris; we should meet so many English there. We will go to Italy. We will have a beautiful little villa beside one of the lakes, and for six months we will be happy as no other couple has ever been. What do you think of the plan?"

They not only talked of the scheme, but they carried it out. Maggie told her father that she was tired of a country life, and that she should get a situation in London. He was unsuspicious and easily deceived. Sir Carlos went home and told his mother that he intended to spend the next six months in Italy, and that then he should have a surprise for her. Everything favored Sir Carlos and Maggie's plan. They were married in London and started for Italy without a misgiving as to their future happiness

CHAPTER XI.

Sir Carlos and Maggie had been married three days, and as yet there had not been the faintest shadow of a cloud to mar their happiness. A thousand times each day Sir Carlos thanked Heaven that he had followed his own inclination. It was so sweet an anecdote, its coarseness and vulto teach his beautiful girl wife, so delightful to watch her rosy mouth with its graceful curves, so blissful to be loved with such passionate devotion, Ah, if he had done as his mother said, if he had spent six months away from Maggie, he would have lost the very happiest time of his life! "If you want a woman to be trained in any particular way, train her yourself," thought Sir Carlos. He spent a week of perfect bliss. He had bought Maggie a magnificent trousseau as they passed through Every requisite and every luxury that was needed for a lady was there; and Maggie's delight had been boundless. However, it did rather jar upon him when, every time she put on a fresh dress, she said ·I wish Lady Carew could see me

Sir Carlos was perfectly happy for some new days. He never wearied or watching Maggie, and the more he watched her the more beautiful he thought her. How right he had been after all, he reflected! A few little eccentricities were less than nothing when compared with her wonderful

One day Sir Carlos drove his wife to the city of Como, as she had expressed a wish to see it. He ordered a recherche dinner at the hotel where they alighted; and it happened that among other things a dish of green peas was served.

"Peas!" cried Maggie, when she saw the dish. "I am very fond of them. My aunt always said I could never have enough of them."

The continual mentioning of her aunt as the highest earthly authority began to annoy him. He was fastidious, too, and did not like to hear a lady speak with enthusiasm of eating. This was the least part of the shock he was destined to suffer. Maggie helped herself most liberally to the green peas; and presently her husband, looking up suddenly, saw his beautiful wife using her knife instead of her fork. "Maggie," he cried angrily. "what are you doing?" Her face flushed, but she looked defiantly at him. * "I know," she said. "But I must use my knife; I cannot help it. I am sure Miss Pierson was very particular in teaching us never to use a knife when eating peas; but look at this fork-I cannot eat peas with it."

"Then go without them. It is unheard-of vulgarity. Never do that again, Maggie; it has horrified me." "And I am so fond of them," she answered petulently. "What can it matter? There is no one here to see

"I am here," he said, "and you are here. You must respect my presence and your own; you should never do when you are alone what you would not do if any one was with you. The laws of good breeding are always the same whether we are alone or with

"That is all nonsense!" cried Mag-

Her husband looked at her in dis-

"Nonsense or not, when you dine with me I shall expect you to observe the same etiquette at table that I observe myself."

"You do not love me; if you did you would not find fault with me," said Maggie.

"I have proved my love," he retorted; and she finished her dinner in sulky silence. This was the first disagreement. The second arose from a similar cause. Maggie had never been accustomed to wine, and she liked it perhaps a little too much. She would drink glass after glass-quite unconscious certainly, of the effect it would have-until she grew sleepy and stupid. Her husband spoke to her about it kindly enough, but firmly; and she bitterly resented his interference. He found, too, that he could not correct her inaccuracies of speech, her mistakes in pronunciation. If there was an improvement one day she was worse the next; that which the glamour of love had hidden from him was glaringly apparent now. He had not been three days in falling in love; he had not been married three weeks before he discovered that his mother's verdict was a true one. His love had been a young man's fancy. Time would have proved it to be so; but he had not waited for time. It was not many weeks before the unhappy Sir Carlos saw that in the wife he had chosen there was no charm save that of her beautiful face. He had thought he would be able to form her mind; it was already formed. He ancied he could educate her; she was already educated. He had belie ed he could train her; she was already trained. The conviction came to him at last that his hasty, ill-advised

Maggie was no companion for him; she never read, never opened either book or paper. She had no experience of life, save such as she had met with in her au t's shop. If she told garity disturbed him. When she had talked to him about her new dresses. about the impression she intended to make on Lady Carew, and her plans when she could live at Firholme, she had no more to say.

Her vulgarity jarred upon him a hundred times each day. She had no taste. She never looked well dressed; she wore inharmonious colors, and spoiled the effect of the most artistic costume by wearing the wrong ornaments.

He had told her frequently that she had never looked so well in anything as she had looked in her pretty pink prints. Then Maggie would cry with rage, believing that he meant to insult her. Sir Carlos knew nothing of this girl whom he had married save that she had a most beautiful face. He knew It annoyed Sir Carlos, but he did nothing of her character and disposidid her utmost to vex him, and as a

Perhaps his greatest horror was the genteel," and gave to some words a peculiar accent for the same reason. Sir Carlos began to detest the very sound of the word. She could be goodshe preferred to be sulky or silent, she could be equally disagreeable.

Sir Carlos now recognized the fact that, although his wife was beautiful enough, she was coarse and vulgar. He had not believed that such a contradiction could exist.

They went from bad to worse when Maggie found that his love was waning. She became jealous; she was sure, she told him, that he loved some one ele; e ther he cared for some one he had left in England or he had met some Italian girl. He never praised her now, never called her beautiful," never said he love I her. What had she done? What did he mean by it? - while he cursed the obstinate folly which had ruined his life. "The Curse of the Carews" was upon him, He had obeyed the promptings of his own self will, and it had brought him to such a pass that he was tired of his life. He dared not go to Firholme. How could he take that sulkey, vulgar, uneducated woman home to Lady Carew?

FEATHERS ON THE FARM.

Possible Profit in Saving and Carefully Curing Them.

If the feathers from all sources on the farm should be carefully cared for and sold, suggests the Breeder and Horseman, they would amount to a neat little sum in the course of a year. While geese and duck feathers are preferable, yet there is a demand for chicken feathers, when properly assorted. In doing this the shorter and softer feathers should be put by themselves and cured either in the sun and air or by artificial heat. It is very necessary to cure the green feathers in order to keep them from spoiling at the quills and yielding a bad odor that might ruin the whole lot.

We priced some pillows, recently, in a furnishing house, and were considerably set back at the price asked for them. Three dollars for a couple of pillows that weighed only four pounds, and the feathers were only second-class at that. OUR MOTTO:

PLUCK, PERSEVERANCE AND PATRIOTISM.

It is rather a peculiar labor celebration in the United States this September. In New York city alone 100,000 workingmen are out of employment and a prosame time with ours, the situation there reason. would not be much better, for the opening of September sees the melancholy results of a strike which has kept 300,-000 miners idle a month and many others longer than that. There was actual suffering for lack of coal, and various industries were paralyzed for weeks.

Thus somewhat grimly Labor day dawns. Nevertheless let it be celebrated with music and the display everywhere of our national flag from windows, doorposts and in processions. These hard times cannot last much longer. The thousands of unemployed workingmen who will parade the streets with noise and many banners of strange device will be an object lesson millionaires may well remember. It is not their fault directly that poor people are hungry, but it is their fault directly that they do not study economic science and that they care for nobody except themselves. It looks not well just now to see a many millioned man building a pleasure yacht whose gorgeousness exceeds that of Cleopatra on the Nile. Millionaires more than poor people need to remind themselves constantly of that brave motto adopted by the Knights of Labor, "An injury to one is the concern of all."

In connection with Labor day parades it is interesting to know that among the marshals for the occasion in New York city are said to be three noblemen—a duke, a baron and a count who work for their living in a riding academy there in various capacities, from that of groom to instructor. They went on strike for higher wages some time since and won; therefore are they fitting martyrs and leaders for the labor cause, although ordinarily labor would scorn to associate

During labor week, too, the world's profit sharing congress holds its meeting in Chicago. > The most singular situation presented itself recently in financial circles. Scarcity of gold is one of the causes that precipitated the hard times, said the experts, yet here was paper money at a premium over gold. Overabundance of silver—its consequent depreciation—was another cause of the trouble, said the experts. Yet the fact was presented in exchange markets that even silver was at a slight premium over gold. The reason in both cases was the scarcity of paper and silver. Gold could not be used for small change in business transac-

HEART DISEASE 20 YEARS.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

DEAR SIRS: For 20 years I was troubled with heart disease. Would frequently have falling spells and smothering at night. Had to sit up or get out of bed to breathe. Had pain in my left side and back most of the time; at last I became dropsical. I was very nervous and nearly worn out. The least excitement would cause me to THOUSANDS faint. I was also much with fluttering. For the last fifteen years I could not sleep on my left side or back until began taking your New Heart Cure. I had not taken it very long until I felt much better, and I can now sleep on either side or back without the least discomfort. I have no pain, smothering, dropsy, no wind on stomach or other disagreeable symptoms. I am able to do all my own housework without any trouble and consider myself cured.

Elkhart, Ind., 1888. Mrs. ELMIRA HATCH.

It is now four years since I have taken any medicine. Am in better health than I have been in 40 years. I honestly be-lieve that Dr. Miles' New CURED Heart Cure saved my life and made me a well woman. I am now 62 years of age, and am able to do a good day's work.

my face, and it was agony for me to make sufficient effort even to whis per. They came suddenly, at any hour of the day or night, lasting from thirty minutes to half a day, leaving as suddenly; but, fer several days after, I was quite prostrated and sore. Sometimes the attacks were almost daily, then less frequent. After about four years of this suffering. I was taken down with bilious typhoid fever, and when I began to recover, I had the worst attack of my old trouble I ever experienced. At the first of the fever, my mother gave me Ayer's Pills, my doctor recommending them as being better than anything lie could prepare. I continued taking these Pills, and so great was the benefit derived that during nearly thirty years I have had but one attack of my former trouble, which yielded readily to the same remedy."

THE grim irony of fate has gone on record again. When the Snake river steamer, Annie Faxon, blew up the other day one of the crew was hurled through the air, alighted in the treacherous current, and was pulled out safely. Since then he went bathing in a shallow pool and has been drowned.

A SINGULAR condition of affairs exists in Massachusetts in that while more than $5,000,000 has been dedicated to the abolition of steam railroad grade-crossings throughout the state the permission is being granted to electric railroads by the score to cross the steam railroads at grade. While the state is attempting to abolish one great menace to human life it is engaged in creating a greater menace. As a rule the Bay state exercises a degree of judgment about matters of this kind that is admirable, but in this case she is pursuing a course suggestive either of imbecility or of an electric railroad lobby that is irresistible.

THE recent riots in Bombay were an outbreak of the deep-seated religious animosity between the Mohammedans and Hindoos which divides these two great sects throughout India. In this deep hatred which the two chief elements of the native population entertain for each other, England, which tolerates and restrains them from cutting each other's throats with severe impartiality, finds her best pledge for the security of British rule. But it is dreadful to think that the Moslems and Buddhists have not learned from their old religions how to behave themselves any better than if they were so many Christians and are as ready to cut each other's throats for a difference of opinion as were some of the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus not so long ago in England itself.

THE constitutionality of the Geary law is to be again passed upon at the October session of the supreme court. It is quite likely that this time the majority will be reversed. All will depend on the action of the justice to be appointed by President Cleveland when congress meets. The grounds for asking a rehearing are that the court was closely divided on the question of the constitutionality of the law, and Justice Harlan did not sit in the case, as he was abroad at the time the arguments were made. It is understood that he believes the law oppressive and unconstitutional. It is no new thing for the supreme court to reverse decisions in important cases affecting political questions. It at first decided that greenbacks issued after war time were unconstitutional. Aftices Strong and Bradley this decision was reversed, the new judges siding with the old minority.

TALMAGE SAILS INTO THE SEVENTH DAY FOLK.

f a Person Does Not Practice Through the Week That Which He Professes on Sunday, He Is No Good on Earth.

BROOKLYN, Sept. 3.—Rev. T. DeWitt Tal-mage in selecting a topic for to-day chose one of practical value to all classes, viz: "Week-Day Religion." The text is from Proverbs 3:6, "In all thy ways acknowledge him."

There has been a tendency in all lands and ages to set apart certain days, places and occasions for especial religious service, and to think that they formed the realm in which reigion was chiefly to act. Now, while holy days and holy places have their use, they can never be a substitute for continuous exercise of faith and orayer. In other words, a man cannot be so good a Christian on Sabbath that he can afford to be a worldling all the week. If a steamer start for Southampton, and sail one day in that direction, and the other six days sail in other directio s. how long before the steamer will g t to Southampton? Just as soon as a min will get to heaven who sails on the S bbath day toward that which is good, and the her six days of the week sails toward the world, the flesh and the devil. You cannot eat so much at the Sabbath banquet that you can afford religious abstinence all the rest of the Genuine religion is not spasmodic, does not go by fits and starts, is not an attack of chills and fever—now cold until your teeth chatter, now hot until your bones ache. Genuine religion marches on steadily, up steep hills, and along dangerous declivities, its eye ever on the everlasting hills crowned with the castles of the blessed.

1 propose, so far as God may help me, to show you how we may bring our religion into ordinary life, and practice in common things-yesterday. to-day, to-morrow.

And in the first place, I remark: We ought to bring religion into our ordinary conversation. A dam breaks and two or three villages are submerged, a South American earthquake swallows a city and people begin to talk about the uncertainty of human line, and in that conversation think they are engaging in religious service, when there may be no religion at all. I have noticed that in proportion as Christian experience is shallow, men talk about funerals and deathbeds and hearses and tombstones and epitaphs. If a man have the religion of the gospel in its full power in his soul, he will talk chiefly about this world and the eternal world and very little comparatively about the insignificant pass be tween this and that. Yet how se dom it is that the religion of Christ is a welcome theme? If a man full of the gospel of Christ goes into a religious circle, and begins to talk about sacre things, all the conversation is hushed. try and settle in the promising fields and things become exceedingly awkward. As on a summer day, the for ests full of song and chirp and carol mighty chorus of bird harmonies, every branch an orchestra-if a hawk appears in the sky, all the voices are hushed, so I have sometimes seen a social circle that professed to be Christian, silenced by the appearance of the great theme of God and re igion. support and for export, is fish, and Now, my friends, if we have the religionation of the control of the contro Canadians have got it in their heads about it in an exhilarant mo d. Do you know that when two Christian people talk as they ought about the things of Christ and heaven God gives special attention, and he writes it all down. Malachi 3:16: "Then they that feared the Lord talked one to the other, and the Lord hearkened and heard, and a book of remembrance was written."

But I remark again: We ought to brigg the religion of Jesus Christ into our ordinary employments. "Oh!" you say, "that's a very good theory for a man who manages a large business, who has great traffic, who holds a great estate; it is a grand thing for bankers and for shippers, thread and but in my store, in my trimming establishment, in my insignificant wor of life, you cannot apply those grand gospel 'principles." I must admit that the careful about the construction of a romance and knight errantry have spider's eye as he is in the conformaone out of life. There is but very little of it left in the world. The temples of Rouen have been changed sticks; the muses h ve retreated before the emigran 'sax and the trapper's gun and a Ve monter might go over the Alleghany and the Rocky Mountains and see neither an Oread nor a -ylph. The groves where the god, used to dwell have been cut up for fire vood. and the man who is looking for great spheres and great s enes for action will not find them. And yet there are Alps to sea e and there are Hellesponts to swim, and they are in common life. It is absurd for you to say that you would serve God if you had a great sphere. If you do not serve him on a small scale, you would not on a large scale. If you cannot stand the bite of a midge, how could you endure the breath of a basilisk? Our national government does not and a tax on buckles, and a tax on shoe. The individual taxes do not amount to much, but in the aggregate to millions and millions of collars. And I would have you, O Christian man, put a high tariff on every annoy ance and vexation that comes through your soul. This might not amount to much, in single cases, but in the aggregate it would be a great revenue of spiritual strength and satisfaction. A bee can suck honey even out of a nettie; and if you have the grace of God in your heart. y u can get sweetne-s out of that which would otherwise irritate and annoy. A returned missionary told me that a company of adventurers rowing up the Ganges, were stung to death by flies that infest that region at certain seasons. I have seen the earth strewed with the carcasses of men slain by insect annoyances. The only way to get prepared for the great troubles of life is to conquer these small troubles. : uppose a oldier should say, "This is only a skirmish, and there are only a few e emies -1 won't load my gun; wait until I can get into some great g neral engagem nt." That min is a coward, and would be a coward in any sphere. If a man does not serve his country in a skirmish he will not in a Waterloo. And if you are not faithful going out against the singlehanded misfortunes o this life, you would not be faithful when great disasters with their thundering artillery came rolling down over the soul.

This brings me to another point. We ought to bring the religion of Jesus Christ into all of our trials. If we have a bereavement, if we lose our fortune, if some great trouble blast like the tempest, then we go to God for comfort; but yesterday n the little annovances of your store, or office. or shop, or factory, or banking house did you go to God for comfort? We must see some soldier crippled, limping along on his cru ch, or his empty coat-sleeve pinned up, before we learn what a grand thing it is to have the use of all our physical facultie. In other words, we are so stupi that nothing but the misfortunes of others can wake us up to an appreciation of our common blessings.

But to-morrow morning you get on a train of cars for Boston. You cross that bridge at Norwalk. You cross all the other bridges. You get to Boston in safety. Then you return home. Not an accident, not an alarm. No thanks. In other words, you seem to be more grateful when fifty people lose their lives and you get off, than you are grateful to God when you all get off, and you have no alarm at all. Now you ought to be thankful when you escape from acciden, but more thankful when they all escape. In one case your gratitude is somewhat selfish: in the other, it is more like what it ought

Who thinks of thanking God for the water gushing up in the well, foaming in the cascade, laughing over the rocks, pattering in the shower, clapping its hands in the sea? Who thinks to thank God for that? Who thinks to thank God for the air, the fountain o life, the bridge of sunbeams, the path of sound, the great fan on a hot summer day? Who thinks to thank God for this wonderful physical organism, this sweep of vision, this chime of harmony struck into the ear, this crimson tide rolling through arter es and veins, this drumming of the heart on the march of immortality?

I convict myself, and I convict every one of you while I say these things, that we are unappreciative of the common mercies of life. And yet if they were withdrawn the heavens would withhold their rain and the earth would crack open under our feet, and famine and desolation and sickness and woe would stalk across the earth, and the whole earth would become a place of skulls.

O, my friends, let us wake up to an appreciation of the common mercies of life. Let every day be a Sabbath, every meal a sacrament, every room a holy of holies. We all have burdens to bear; let us cheerfully bear them. We all have battles to fight; let us courageously fight them.

If we want to die right, we must live right. You go home and attend to your little sphere of duties. I will go ome and attend to my little sphere of duties. While Danes will not admit that whatever of true greatness in art and literature the land has produced reached its po no of culmination in these two men only, the outer world, not prone to rate at their true value race characteristies, so considers it. A d rsen, in many respects, was more national in his thought and feeling than Thorwald-sen.

The latter followed the classical traditions and, because of the direct appeal of carved and mou ded forms to the artistic sense of all men, was in touch with the higher minds of all climes. Andersen was favored, in that his literary style was of such simplicity and directness that not even the translators could detract from the merits of his works. It is national, but the flavor is as delightful to foreigners as to native palates.

On the right side of the main entrance to the Danish section stands the statue of Andersen. The face, of noble lines, but simple, kindly expression, finds its way to the heart of every visitor. Within are shown many objects of familiar use during the life of the writer. Manuscripts in whole or in part of his stories and poems are exhibited. His hat, his spectacles, his watch and seal and even his will are shown. The latter disposes of property worth but $1,000. He had no need of money. No wonder, therefore that the Danish nation honors the memory of this remarkable man, and that in every way it tries to hand down to posterity the traditions of his original and characteristic individuality. During his life time the Danish people gave a visible expression to their admiration of the king of fairy tales. Within the church noeve was drv, as the coffin, decked with flowers, was being carried out to the tones of the funeral march composed for Thorwaldsen's burial by Andersen's highly gifted friend, the composer, I. P. E Hartmann, who was playing the organ himself. It was generally felt that in Andersen Denmark had lost one of those sons of hers that had most highly contributed to throw a luster on the nation all over the civilized world. And Denmark, who feels that she owes Hans Christian Andersen an immense debt of gratitude, could see no better way of giving vent to these ieelings than by being partly represented through him

Thorwaldsen was born in 1770 in Copenhagen and died in 1844 in the city of h s birth. His life had been long and his career honorable. Returning from Rome in 1838, he was received at Copenhagen with honors a king might have envied. He reposes in the museum erected to contain his works. Of Thorwaldsen his biographer says: "To sons like Thorwaldsen a little country owes its right to exist as a nation. For practical purposes a lit le country cannot keep up with the great nations; neither in power nor in riches can it compare with foreign states. Still, men like Thorwaldsen, Hans Christian Andersen, H. C Orsted and Niels Gade made such a country both powerful and rich. These are the sums the little state has to contribute to the market of the world. Although he is said to be not at all popular with the Paris municipal councilors there is no doubt of the eminent qualifications of M. Lepine, the new prefect of police, for his office. He is a man of extraordinary energy and determination and has had long and valuable experience in polico work. M. Lepine made his administrative debut in 1877 as sub-prefect at La Palisse, then he was at Montpri on, Langres and Fon-tainebleau, whence he was transferred to the Chateauroux as prefect of the department L'Indre. lie left that office to go to Paris as

This is in keeping with the character of the man who, a few days after having occupied his new office of prefect, went himself among the groups which attempted in the Latin quarter on the latest national holiday of July 14 to set fire to a newspaper stand and to renew the seven days riots, the suppression of which cost his predecessor, M. Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneacial properties of a perfect lax-ative; effectually cleaning the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers d permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance. Syrup of Figs is for sale by all drug-

'I am ready to testify under oath that if it had not been for August Flower I should have died before this. Eight years ago I was taken sick, and suffered as no one but a dyspeptic can. I employed three of our best doctors and received no benefit. They told me that I had heart, kidney, and liver trouble. Everything I ate distressed me so that I had to throw it up. August Flower cured me. There is no medicine equal to it." LORENZO F. SLEEPER, Appleton, Maine.

say. Good-by: one last kiss, I'm half sorry That I am fifteen, dear, to-day.

One bright spring morning we were called to the stable to make the acquaintance of the new colt. The stall loor was opened and there he stood the blackest little fellow imaginable with a tiny white star in his forehead. He looked at us and we looked at him; after that, for some minutes, both sides seemed waiting for an introduction. The colt took a shaky step or two forward, and with raised ears and many nods cautiously advanced toward us.

Politely the hand of fellowship was offered him, but he only smelt it and then commenced chewing the sleeve. Another hand gave a little pat to his neck, and presently four hands were stroking and caressing the soft black coat. From that hour the colt was claimed as our own, and, indeed, he became the pet of the household, submitting with much good nature to being almost killed by kindness.

Days passed and that "crooked-leg strengthened and grew into a straight-limbed, erect little animal, racing about the field airing his heels at the staid old plow-horses, which only raised their heads from the clover to gaze after his flying figure in seeming astonishment and then the time when Traveler, as we called him, would be a full-grown, shining black horse, and so it was quite a surprise to us to find white hairs among the black, which increased rapidly until he was pure white, unmarred by a single speck, the contrast making more lustrous his big black eyes. We were forgetful of the strange fact that all white horses were once black colts there never was a white colt, and if there were one it would be a worldwide curiosity.

To the younger members of the family Traveler was an unfailing source of delight. Possessing, as he did, a most amiable disposition, they were allowed perfect liberty with him, and frequently he would be seen galloping about the yard with four little riders astride his back. Sometimes there would be a tumble, but Traveler would instantly stop and stand quietly waiting for them to re-trot. Several times during that drive he deliberately stopped the phaeton to scratch his ear with his hind foot, a feat that I never saw accomplished by any other animal in harness.

Never was there a slower horse than Traveler-until he was turned out in the pasture. Then he was a new creature; with a plunge and a kick he would start on a gallop around the field, with head and tail up, full of life and spirits. But if some one would approach with a bridle his head would drop, his tail hang dejectedly and his eyes become dull—the time for work had come and he didn't like it.

Even a Tax on Death. In the history of taxation there is nothing more curious than the imposts to be found in the laws of the early days of Holland. The most curious tax of all was one imposed in 1674 on boots and shoes, says the Shoe and Leather Review. In order to prevent the impost from being invaded, each of those articles so essential to numan comfort had to be conspicuous y marked on the upper leather with the stamp of the maker, and also that of the taxing officer. The sum to be paid was regulated by the size of the poot or shoe. So, apart from the question of beauty, in those days it was real advantage to have a small foot. In 1666 a tax was imposed on all passengers traveling in Holland by land or water. In 1791 this tax was still in orce. In 1674 a duty of five cents was levied upon each person who entered a tavern before noon. The tax was ncreased for afternoon visits. sons who assembled in a private house after 3 o'clock in the afternoon for the purpose of amusing themselves had each to pay a certain sum, and those who entered a place of public entertainment were likewise taxed. There was a duty on marriages and deaths. The amount of the tax varied according to the social position of the parties; while in the case of a person buried outside of the district in which he had lived, the amount payable by his executor was doubled.

Johnnie Wouldu't Take a "Dare." Johnnie started out with good intentions, just as older persons do, says the Louisville Courier-Journal, His father had told him not to leave the yard on pain of a dose of "peach-tree Having been a small boy yourself you probably know the tingling properties of this heroic remedy. "Double dare?" cried Johnnie hoping against hope.
"Double dare 'n cross myself."

This was too much for any spirited erson to bear, so Johnnie climbed ver the fence, exclaiming as he touched the ground:
"Never took er dare, 'n never will."

The fire bells sounded just then and Johnnie and Willie started to go to the fire, but found it was too far away. Coming back Willie said:
"My pap-y's going to buy me a pony." "Hones'?"

"Hope er me die." "My pap'y 'ud buy me one, too, if I'd as' fer't." "Over the left," sneeringly.

"Over the right," threateningly. "My pap-y's better'n yourn." "My pap-y c'n whip yourn with his lef' han'." "Can't."

The Andaman Dwarfs.

There probably never was a boy or girl who did not dream of possessing for his or her own pleasure a band of pygmies who should do what they were bidden like so many animated dolls. Dwarfs have been found in Africa, but the natives of the Andaman islands, in the Bay of Bengal, are the smallest race of people in the world. The average height of a full-grown Andaman is four feet five inches, and few weigh over seventy-six pounds. They are marvellously swift of foot, and as they smear themselves over with a mixture of oil and red ochre, present a very strange appearance. Few travelers care to encounter any of the warlike little people, for their skill in throwing the spear and in using the bow is only equalled by their readiness to attack strangers.
Altogether their traits are not such as to make them desirable additions to the playrooms of children, since they have been said to eat men alive. They are as black as coals, and seem to find it desirable to tattoo themselves. This artistic venture they usually begin when they are 8 years of age, using bottle-glass for the purpose of getting their flesh into a condition to receive the color and retain it. They eat fish, turtles and wild honey, and are rarely satisfied with a luncheon that does not provide them with six pounds of eatables. They live in huts made of leaves, and in spite of their freedom, which amounts to wildness, are exceedingly irritable.—Harper's Young ANOTHER MAN'S SISTER I occupied (and still do occupy) chambers which consist of two rooms on to the landing by one door. Theremind that once the hall door is occupied by the enemy the only other exit is from the window by way of the gutter-pipe-a vertical distance of three stories. There should always be two ways, not including the window, out of every set of chambers.

This need had never presented itself to me until one memorable afternoon when, without knock, word, or warning, a round-faced, golden-haired, blue-eyed maiden, in an astrakhanfaced jacket, a gray skirt and a black velvet hat, charged into my room after the most approved fashion of all the comedies, crying: "Dear old Joe!"

But when that lady enters a brother's rooms.

The maiden gave a little scream as turned. She apologized. Could I tell her whereabouts Mr. Joseph Rupard's chambers were?

I could not; for you may live seventeen years in chambers without knowing the face, life, or occupation of any one of your fellow-convicts. I suggested that she should speak to the housekeeper, and escorted her to the tiny hall aforesaid.

You will observe that there was nothing whatever in these proceedings to bring a blush to the thinnest cheek.

The imp of perversity, who is generally playing about on the landing for six shillings a week, met me in the hallway, saying: "Lady and gentleman to see you, sir,"

Behind him stood two figures that I knew, and at any other time would have received with joy. The maiden at my heels lost her singularly pretty head, and, whispering "What shall I do?" bolted back into the sitting-room

All this was strictly in accordance with the rules of the stage; but why it should have taken place in my chambers I could never understand. And yet I was deeply thankful that she had not gone forth, like Una, under the noses of my visitors. Uncle' im all about it. "Oh, so glad to see you," said I; "but I'm afraid you've come to a regular camp in the wilderness. Fact is, my sitting-room is upside downthat fool of a housemaid has been doing something to the fire that has filled the place with smuts, and I've made her dust everything out again. But come into the bedroom, since you've taken the trouble to climb all these stairs." Even as I spoke in the hall, I heard the heavy arm-chair wheeled up against my sitting-room door, and there was a sound of emphatic dusting. I thanked heaven that was pleased to afflict me that it had sent at least "one heart still ready to play out the play." Into my humble bedroom I led those relatives; and my aunt, after the manner of women, made searching inventories with her eye, and inquired as to whether I was well looked after. But it was the auntipathetic kiss and the remark that followed-"My boy, how hot you are! Aren't you well?"-that seared my perfectly innocent soul like hot iron. Perfected crime must bring with it a sense of ease and rest. It is the unmerited imputation of evil that strains the nerves.

My aunt would fain have had tea, "when that girl had finished cleaning your rooms." The bedroom door was of course open. I assured my aunt that the folly of that housemaid prevented her from finishing anything this side of doomsday, and that the dust would not settle down till twenty minutes after that.

There was a crowing, choking noise, that might have been a smothered chuckle. from the sitting-room, whereof the fanlight above the door was open.

"What a very superior voice she has!" said Aunt Alice. "Quite a lady's. Is she pretty?"

"Come and see," quoth I, with that icy innocence that only cunning can bestow. I half-opened the sittingroom door, coughed vehemently, and drew back as one choked with the

I was coatless, as has been recounted (people never stay long with a man who lacks a coat), my hair was on end, and I was flushed. But there was no resisting that infection of mirth. I laughed aloud. The air connected by a tiny hallway giving was dense with dust and all the furniture was out of place. "That fool of fore it will be plain to the meanest a housemaid" had lived up to her reputation.

"Haven't I done the room beautifully?" she said, with a wicked giggle; "thank you-thank you, oh, so much, for helping me!" "Not in the least," said I; "I've

Several years after Traveler had become a part of the family a very tempting offer was made for him, and, I am sorry to say, he was sold.
When he had departed we began to miss him; the stable looked lonesome, the other horses did not take his place, and that feeling grew until we begged to have him brought back; we would do anything-only

Through the sympathetic kindness of his new owners he came back and met with such a welcome as would have overwhelmed any other horse, but he took it quietly with that sad expression of his, and hanging head. After his return he became a permanent fixture on the farm, for the steady work of which he proved himself invaluable, though seldom ridden or driven by us. Once I was rash enough to drive him, and that time was enough! He crawled most of the way, and upon my standing up, the better to use the persuasive power of a whip, he would gallop for a few minutes and then subside into a slow
