THERE is something in a name after all. George Washington has proved his grit by capturing a fugitive bear in the streets of Chicago. George is a colored man and by profession a trainer of animals. It will be remembered that the original Washington had a similar experience with a British lion in another part of this country.

We are getting our war news via Nagazaki, Hong Kong, Singapore, India, Persia and Europe, a distance of about 27,000 miles. The distance between Japan and Port Townsend, in the state of Washington, is less than 4,000 miles, but it happens that there are no cables under the Pacific. Hence the news that we get from the Orient must make almost a circuit of the globe before it reaches us.

THAT dreadful and diseased cad, Rudyard Kipling, has just printed in a London journal a poetic nightmare which he calls "A Spectacle for the Compassion of the Civilized World." It is aimed at the American spirit and is based on the recent labor disturbance in and around Chicago. The indications are that the feeble English mind of Mr. Kipling has fetched loose from its moorings, and is now drifting tempest-tossed. The poor cadger has long nourished a hatred of our fair republic. His hostility took the form a few years hatred has been intensified if anything. But he is not the only blackthis remark.

THE study of ancestry is one of the most engaging. Let a person begin it and there is no neglecting it. The multiplying historical societies, the local histories and family genealogies, are evidences of this new study. This study is not the whim of aged people, but is entered upon by young people, and even pupils in our public schools, with forethought and defrom living. To leave the world passion of humanity.

They are linked by the ocean with Asiatic trading interests. Some of the views expressed by English newspapers during our recent labor troubles were amusing, but they cannot compare with these Teutonic suggestions. The "Post" seems to look upon the United States as an aggregation of small principalities, having no interests in common, and neither one dependent upon the other.

Sleeping Sickness.

In certain districts in Africa, notably in the west, central and Congo sections, there is a most curious and puzzling disease that has baffled all attempts to prevent or cure it. The first symptoms are an appearance of drowsiness, indicated by drooping of the eyelids and a lack of interest except when roused. This tendency to sleep, which is very slight at first, rapidly increases until the sufferer falls asleep at all times in the day and over any work or amusement, no matter what may be its character. The general health does not appear to suffer any perceptible impairment, and treatment of the most active sort has little if any effect. After a time, the patient is in a perpetual slumber, seeming to be never really awake, and if roused to take food or drink immediately relapses into the usual lethargic condition. The disease or decline sometimes lasts twelve months, death apparently ensuing from starvation. It rarely attacks white persons, but is for the most part confined to young persons between the ages of 12 and 20 years. Boys and young men are more frequently the victims than girls or young women. This most remarkable state of things is under investigation by eminent medical men, and their reports will be awaited with interest.

ESCAPE OF CRANDALL

The prison stands upon a little ele vated stretch of ground, its tall trees and trim, green vard contrasting with the dreary barrenness of the low, sagebrush covered hills which lie about it in all directions.

Young Paddock, who had been sent by his paper to report anything of interest concerning Crandall's escape, drove up over the dusty road and alighted at the great barred doors. He found to his disappointment that the warden and his posse were still out on the hills, and he sat down with a bored air upon a bench in front of the low stone building to await their return.

The day was warm and bright, the sun beaming broadly down from the clear Nevada sky. It was so still that the sound of the bells on a mule-train passing just beyond the stone walls, sounded dreamily through the hazy summer morning long after the heavy wagons were out of sight. Paddock was almost dozing when a man in stripes approached.

"Mr. Jarret wants to know, sir, if you'd care to see the men turned out Paddock rose lazily. "Why yes-I guess so. You--

"I'm a trusty, you know," the man said with a half laugh. "I unlock the inside gate. Please come this way." They passed the outer gate through the corridor, and then came to the tall barred door through which the convicts pass after each meal. Here Jarrett joined them. He was a tall, burly man with great heavy shoulders, a massive head, and quick, keen eyes. They stood on one side while the men filed out, numbered, and at the clang of a bell, slowly dispersed in all directions over the great stone yard. "You see," Jarrett remarked, striding ahead of the reporter, "the yard's a quarry guarded on three sides by natural stone walls. On the fourth-well, here's where Crandall had hidden his gun; here's where he crept up the earth wall. Here's where my shot caught him in the shoulder, I think. But the man's got the luck of Satan to back up his courage, for a general break of the men on this side followed. We settled them pretty quick, but Crandall—oh, what's the use o' talking of these things! They jest happen, and I'm blowed if I know who's to blame. He turned away swearing under his Paddock's languor had all disappeared back here, where the men, with listless, lagging step crept around the sunbaked stone yard. They were like so much locked-up capital, which the state's hard times had condemned to heart-breaking idleness. Being denied the privilege of occupation, they talked indifferently among themselves, becoming dumb and watchful at the guard's approach, or tended their little gardens which the unwearying, laborious patience of long, monotonous years had built up in the corner of the rock. Here, in the most sheltered spot, which even the bitter mountain storms had sparfed, was one little plot of green which more than the others attracted Paddock's attention; for the vines and bushes were fresh and thirfty the few vegetables were crisp and flourishing, and the graceful morningglories and sweet-peas, aided by the unpainted trellises and much knotted string, clambered high up on the rocky

"Yes," said Jarrett, ungraciously, "the

'lucky garden' is a pretty spot, but it'll who tries Crandall's trick.'

This was his garden? Jarrett nodded. "It took him three months to get enough earth to make the bed on the rock, and the winter had come by the time he'd managed to get it fenced in. But he took more pride in this bit of green! He knew blade of grass, an' not a bud could be picked without his noticin' 'Course none of the 'cons' would touch a thing, but we've visitors sometimes that haven't sense enough to be out of jail. Yon's the linnet Crandall trapped." He lifted the clumsily fashioned wooden cage from its place among the vines, but nothing moved

"Hey, Jack!" Jarrett called to one of the men who came limping up. He touched his old hat. "Where's Crandall's linnet?"

"It-got away," said the man, hesitatingly. "Got away, did it?" repeated Jarrett.

"Don't know. When I took the garden-for the plants were a'most dead for water-I lifted the paper Crandall always pinned over the cage to keep the hot sun off, expectin' to see the mad thing dash its silly, red head agen the bars and shrick till its throat was hoarse. But the bird was gone." Jarrett nodded understandingly.

"Crandall set the bird loose before he made his break, I'll swear. Wish I'd ha' known it," he said to the young man after they had turned to re-enter the prison.

They passed through the cells till they came to the one the murderer had occupied. It seemed to the young man that the small, compact dens were tainted, in spite of the rigorous, institutional cleanliness. He gasped and grew faint. He followed Jarrett eager ly out of the inclosure and drew a long, free breath when they were once more in the open. But, being young and rather inexperienced, he was ashamed of his emotion, and, what was worse to him, afraid that it had been remarked. Assuming an air of ferocity, he turned his boyish, good-natured face to the guard and said in his most offhand manner:

"It's tough that the posse had left before I came. I'd liked mighty well to get a lok at the fellow." 'Ho!" laughed Jarrett. "You'd like to be with the posse? Well, that'll be easy enough. Look yonder." He pointed out toward the long, white, dusty road. "There come some of them now. If they haven't got Crandall-and I'll bet the prettiest new sixshooter you ever saw they haven'tyou can join our party, which'll leave

They advanced to meet the group of men, who, still far off, threw out empty hands and shook their heads discouragedly.

"Why didn't ye bring him along?" shouted Jarrett, grinning. But the men were worn out with their long tramp over the hills; tired and sleepy, their sense of humor could not be counted upon. One of them answered Jarrett's question with a gesture-lips pursed, eyebrows raised, and palms turned upward; another gave an inappreciative grunt, as he passed or toward the prison; the third stopped just long enough to deliver his mes

"Say, Jarrett, warden says you're to join him at the lower end of the Piute Canon. You're to bring two guards with you and start's soon's Mr. Franks come back from town to take

"That'll be in half an hour. Al He nodded to the man, who right." passed on wearily. "Now," he continued turning to Paddock, "do you really want to come?"

"Do I!" "We'll take a little lunch in a hurry, get our guns—I'll show you that new one—and start."

The sun was setting when they reached Piute Canon. They had seen no trace of the warden's camp, but, as they began the ascent of the ravine, a man came out to meet them. Paddock's heart beat madly. His desire for excitement and peril was curiously confused with natural sympathy for the under man in the fight. But the stranger proved to be a guard, stationed there to direct the reinforcements further up the canon, whither a clew had guided the warden and his party. So they pressed on, leaving horses in the man's care at the foot of the ridge, for the sides of the mountain sloped steeply. Conversation became difficult as they climbed, and they toiled on in silence till they had reached the summit and found the party.

"We've got him this time," were the white-haired warden's first words his fine benevolent face glowing in tri-umph; "he camped on this very spot last night. Burns and Davis are out now. If they don't find him, you and I'll do the business, Jarrett." He threw back his handsome head, smiling pleasantly.

They threw themselves upon the ground to rest, and the warden began give the reporter the particulars of the escape. He was interrupted by the arrival of the two guards. They had found nothing.

"Well, Jarrett, you, Wilson, Bennett, and this young fellow, if he wants to, come along with me. They took the trail up the mountain. We'll climb over the hill yonder. On the other side the brush is thick, with the trail toward Hatton's ranch not far off. There we'll find Crandall, if I am not much mistaken.'

Soon they were ready. The warden's enthusiasm had communicated itself o his companions. Jarrett examined his new, long revolver lovingly, for "Crandall isn't the man to go back for life without a fight." Wilson and Bennett marched on grimly, watching every bush, and Paddock followed, his brain in a whirl of excitement. The long twilight of the summer's day had passed. In the dark, warm night they walked on softly, speaking only in whispers. The young man's conflicting sentiments had yielded by this to the silent expectation, the vigilant enthusiasm of the rest of the party. Jarrett's rifle, which the reporter had taken for a moment while the former examined his pistol, he held unconsciously now with a firm grasp. His nerves were so strained that the slightest noise came to him like a shock. When Jarrett touched him upon the shoulder to tell him that the warden had called a halt, he jumped nervously. Jarrett's lips curled beneath his heavy dark-red mustache. Under cover of the darkness, he did not try to conthe gleam of contempt in hi small, keen eyes.

"We're hot on the trail," he whisper ed to Wilson, "Warden, Bennett, and I'll go on down the ravine. He"-pointing to Paddock-"had better stay here with you while you watch. He'll do less damage here than with us. A shot from us or from you'll be the signal that Crandall's found." He had spoken with his mouth close to the guard's ear. Wilson and Paddock stood in silence, watching till the warden's party had disappeared. For a long time they waited, expecting every moment to hear the signal. The young man's nervous trembling had passed away; he was eager for the conflict. The softer sentiments had vanished; only the savage in birn remained and longed for battle.

After a time he could no longer bear inaction. He envied the guard his sentry's duty, which gave him the liberty of pacing up and down. The moon was just rising. Rocks and bushes took queer shapes in the dim light, and from behind any of them Crandall might be lurking. With a nod to the guard, the young man turned and climbed to the top of the hill. Far down, a glimmer of light from the broad moon tipped the shining barrel of Jarrett's pistol, which doubtless he had cocked in his hand. The warden and his two men were creeping cautiously along. Paddock stood awhile; then, rounding a turn in the twisting trail, suddenly he came upon the murderer crouched behind a great rock, his eyes bent upon the same gleam of steel that had attracted Paddock's attention.

"Throw up your hands!" Paddock commanded, his young voice vibrating with triumph. Suddenly, remembering Jarrett's rifle, which he had forgotten in his excitement, he covered the man before him.

Surprised at this unexpected areault in the rear, the man jumped, turned, bent for his gun-then obeyed. defiance in his haggard face yielded to to despairing consciousness of defeat. They stood thus for a minute, the convict braced against the towering rock, one hand above his head, the other bound in dirty cloth hanging limp at his side. But, as the young man's eyes met those other smoldering, hunted ones only the rifle's length away, suddenly his other self awoke. Gradually his ordinary point of view presented itself. He had intended to be simply a spectator; what personal or official resent-ment had he to gratify? His most powerful feeling as they stood there fac- in the near future. By its aid the ing each other in the dusky silence was one of astonishment to find himself in such a position. He shifted his rifle.

Crandall looked at him inquiringly. The young man reddened with embarrassment. He laughed shortly, confusedly: lowered his rifle and walked off, leaving the convict still standing, one hand above his head, almost petrified with astonishment.

Suddenly awakening amazement to the danger of his posi-tion, Crandall glanced at either side; then made for the brush and disappeared.—Afra Yorke, in Argonaut.

Grandmother's Story. Three apples fell off a big tree. Three small boys hid behind a hedge. An old gentleman who owned the orchard and was walking about under the trees heard the apples fall and poked about for them with his cane. Six small feet twinkled over the grass. Presto! No magician ever made apples disappear more wonderfully, more quickly or more completely. In a second more six bright, laughing eyes peeped down from the tree where the old gentleman was still poking away in the grass.

"Peste!" said the old man. "I must have been mistaken. At any rate it is dinner time, and one cannot spend one's day looking for apples. Besides, my eyes are bad, my ears not so keen as they used, and I don't feel like a boy any longer. I will send a servant for them.'

Then the old gentleman hobbled out of the orchard toward his house. In a twinkling three small boys, brown as berries, were at the foot of the tree, each with a great apple. One look, a laugh, and they were off over the meadows.

"Ha! ha! papa!" they cried as they ushed pellmell into the family dining room. "We have teased the old man at the corners to his fill and for once we'll have a feast on the old miser's apples that I believe nobody but himself ever tasted before.

"How is this?" cried the father, furious. "You stole the old man's apples! You young rascals, wait until I thrash you thoroughly for this." "But we did it only to tease him," cried the children, "and to give him a lesson besides. He is so miserly." "You must be punished," said the

"No!" cried the grandmother, sitting in her chair. "It was a jest, William, and the children shall return the apples. But they shall not be punished."

"You are too easy with the children, mother. They will turn out thieves."

The old lady smiled placidly. "Children," she said, "I once knew a little boy whose mother was very lenient with him. He had many troubles at school and he always came home to his mother and she soothed him. The boys about him said he had a jolly mother, and so they came, too, sometimes to be soothed. But this little boy kept getting into trouble continually. Once even he got into an orchard and robbed it. Once he took down a bird's nest with eggs in it—but then he was sorry when he saw how grieved the mother-bird was -and his mother knew there was nuch good in him because he grieved for the mother-bird. Yet he was always in trouble, and it took all his mother's tenderness to have patience with him. Once he was caught in an orchard, and then he had a hard time of it, for the dogs were set on him and the farmer ran after him with a pitchfork, and there would have been great trouble had he not reached his mother's arms before the dogs caught him."

The boy's father reddened and walked over to the window. The old lady's eyes followed and a tender light filled her face. The boys saw the situation at a glance.

"Ah ha! it was you, papa!" they cried, "vou were grandma's culprit, It is you who must make confession now.'

The grandmother smiled again and "The riddle is solved, and you said: see, boys, in spite of his mother's leniency, what a good man your father has turned out to be. And now. children, after dinner you will return the apples to the old man with an apology."

Then the old lady rose and walked over to her son and placed her hand lightly on his shoulder.

"We must be lenient with youth. William, for it is the perfume of our old age. The children have the world to romp in when they are young-Time will give them no such lordship again."

Just then the father caught sight of the boys playing leapfrog below. He laughed and hallooed to them.

"Be off to the woods, boys, and be sure to bring home a birch switch for me to use on myself when I am forgetful. And don't forget the biggest and finest nosegay you can pick for grandmamma, to whom, next to God, we owe all the blessings we have in life."-N. Y. Advertiser.

Wonders of the Microphone.

One of the most curious instruments which the development of electrical science has brought into being is the microphone. It embraces within itself almost the whole principle of the modern telephone, and with it may be performed a series of experiments which, aside from being interesting, are wonderfully significant of what we may expect from its development footsteps of a fly walking on the stand on which it is placed is clearly heard, and give the sensation of a horse's tread, and even a fly's scream, especially at the moment of death, is easily audible. The rustling of a feather or a piece of dress goods on the board of the instrument, and completely inaudible under ordinary cirnumstances, are distinctly heard in the microphone. The ticking of a watch is rendered very loud at quite a distance from the receiver. A musical box placed in connection with

There are many kinds of herons. The common variety is the grray heron, and the most beautiful is the white heron, whose long silky white feathers are much used for hat trimming. Mr. White Heron is hunted for his beautiful feathers, while his common gray brother is suffered to live in peace, because he isn't pretty enough to be killed.

Frank Proteous' Terrible Mistake—Peach Trees Affected by the Yellows-The State Fair at Detroit-Other State Hap

Lindholm Arrested.

Ex-Deputy Secretary of State August W. Lindholm, who fled the country late last March after embezzling $2,000 of the funds of the state, was arrested at Gothenberg, Sweden, and held to await the action of Gov. Rich. This information was conveyed to the governor in a telegram from Secretary of State Gresham, who had been advised by Minister Ferguson at Stockholm. The governor at once telegraphed Secretary Gresham that Lindholm was wanted here, and will have him extra dited. Ever since Lindholm's departure the authorities have been quietly searching for him, and through the postal officials learned that on July 5 a letter had been mailed by Lindholm at Keil of Holstein to his wife in Lansing. Deputy Sheriff Wright and Chief of Police Sanford immediately sent circulars, offering a reward of $100 in gold for information leading to his apprehension. The telegram is the first heard from them. Prosecuting Attorney Gardner said that Lindholm will be promptly prosecuted on the embezzlement charge, and also that he undoubtedly knows all about the salaries amendment frauds, and that his testimony in the pending cases is of great importance.

State Fair at Detroit.

There promises to be an unusually large display of farm implements, and vehicles at the state fair, which opens on the Detroit Exposition grounds September 10, and continues until September 21. W. P. Custard, of Mendon, is superintendent of farm imple ments, and H. R. Dewey, of Lansing, has charge of the department of vehicles. The fair will not be open evenings, the hours being from 7 a. m. to 6 p. m. The admission will be placed at 50 cents, a project to make it 25 cents having been discarded as not feasible. There may be one or two special 25-cent days, however. No additional charge will be made for any exhibit inside the grounds. The horse and bicycle races are exciting much in-Six days will be given up to the trotters, pacers and running horses

Terrible Mistake.

Frank Proteous shot and instantly killed his wife. The tragedy occurred in Portage township, seven miles south of Kalamazoo. During the night rain commenced falling and Mrs. Proteous awoke and went to close an open window. In the meantime her husband aroused and saw his wife coming through the open door leading to th bedroom. He had not missed her from bed, and mistook her for a burglar Reaching for his revolver, which was near at hand, he fired. The shot was fatal, the ball passing through Mrs. Proteous' body near the heart. She exclaimed: "Frank, you have shot me," and sank to the floor. The husband is prostrated with grief.

A Deserted Camp. The closing of Camp Rich after one of the most successful encampments ever held, furnished many scenes as unique and interesting as any during the five days' outing. While officers were hurrying about each other's headquarters to say good-bye, the men took advantage of the relaxed discipline to indulge in good-natured jokes. Capt. Henry C. Dummer, of Company B, Fifth regiment, against whom charges were preferred by Col. Frank B. Lyon, handed his resignation to Gen. Owen Col. Lyon appointed Lieut. Fred M. Hodskin to take command of the company on the return trip to Manistee.

Peach Trees Affected by Yellows Peach Yellows Commissioner Albert Southworth makes public an announcement that has more serious results wrapped up in the non-accept ance of its importance than any six months' drought that might overtake this entire peach belt. He has marked 67 peach trees in one orchard to be cut down and burned at once, as they are badly affected by the yellows. Every fruit grower knows from sad experi ence of 15 years ago that unless this terrible fruit scourge is dealt with as vigorously as though it were smallp ox their entire orchards in two years will be dead, and none but sickly fruit will be yielded in the meantime.

SPALDING NOMINATED.

The Nomination was Made Unanimou After a Sharp Contest.

It took 51 ballots to nominate Gen eral George Spalding, of Monroe, for Congress in the Second district Republican convention at Adrian, but when the time came every one of the 94 votes in the convention was registered for the gallant veteran from Monroe. It was one of the most stubborn contests ever waged in the state and Mon roe's 14 and Wayne's 11 stood solidly for the general from the first to the fifty-first ballot.

WEEKLY REVIEW OF TRADE.

NEW YORK .- Dunn's review of trade says

New York.—Dunn's review of trade says: The new tariff, if signed by the president, as expected, provides a definite basis for business. No supplemental legislation is thought possible next year at least. Large improvement has been expected from any until settlement, the more because of a vast amount of business deferred from week to week in hope of more definite conditions. The rush of such business or even a part of it might easily double the transactions for a time. Resumption by iron and steel works, which were stopped by the strikes, continues to depress prices of some finished products, but with more furnaces operating prices of pig iron are not lower. Comparisons given show a fall in prices ranging from 20 to 44 per cent in iron and its products since October, 1890, which sufficiently accounts for the idleness of more than a third of the works. Speculation in corn has been active, the price falling 4c, rising 3½0 and falling 2c, with varying reports of injury, which in some of the states is undouttedly severe. While western receipts in two weeks have been only 24,26,578 bu, against 4,378,103 bu last year. the high price explains exports of only 541,685 bu, against 3,301,908 bu in the same weeks last year. Pork has advanced 50c and lard 35c per 100 lbs, with justification in the injury to corn. Wheat is about 16 lower, western receipts being very heavy for two weeks, 10,-680,418 bu, against 5,340,581 bu last vear, and it receipts being very heavy for two weeks, 10,-690,418 bu, against 5,940,581 bu last year, and it is claimed that Minnesota and the two Dakotas will yield 125,000,000 bu, the second largest yield in their history. The fallures this week have been 220 in the United States, against 455 ast year, and 45 in Canada, against 27 last

STRUCK DOWN.

Pain and Suffering-The Struggle Short and the Victor Small but Mighty-The Son of a Veteran Tells a Wonderful Story.

I am the son of a British army officer, who at the time of my birth was stationed at the old historic town of Niagara, the scene of many a conflict. I learned the trade of shoemaking, followed it as my business until the confinement and the continual sitting posture of my occupation began to tell on me; this was fully 20 years ago, and my history from that time until about 1886 was one of constant pain and misery. At first the pain, which was slight, would take me over the region of the bladder. feeling almost like something gnawing or eating. As it became worse it would pass up the spine to the kidneys, causing intense suffering. so much so that I have often fallen to the ground in agony of pain, as helpless as if I had been struck down by an overwhelming force, and would have to be carried into the house. I would be confined to my bed for weeks at a time, perfectly helpless as a child. I could not urinate without the use of a catheter: this condition of things continued for years. I was never well, and was compelled to abandon my trade altogether. I doctored with all the local physicians, tried electric belts and electric shocks, and even went to a specialist in the city of Detroit, without receiving any material relief. I despaired of ever getting well, and death would have indeed been a happy deliverance. I tried all the patent medicines that I plaint, without benefit. Happening to see an advertisement of Doan's Kidney Pills I concluded to send and get a box, although I had little faith that they would benefit me. The immediate relief experienced from their use was astonishing. I kept taking them for a little while, and found that I was troubled no more. The terrible attacks of agonizing pain stopped and have never returned. The cure has been sure and lasting. I am glad to have the opportunity of letting the suffering world know the particulars of my case, of my surprise at finding in that little pill the deliverance from a life of misery and pain. I travel up and down the country a great deal, and always carry Doan's Kidney Pills with me, and have seen many cases as bad as mine was cured by their agency. I have given dozens of boxes away, feeling that I was indeed "a friend

the man with the red face. The girl reappeared. "Master wants to know what's your business?" "I called in answer to an advertise-

"Well, I don't care to see them." "I last served the duke of-"

The psychological society was in session in the French capital and the comments on the feats performed in Italy were made more interesting by the presence of a renowned English mind reader This gentleman showed great aptitude in ferreting out criminals, and his accuracy in this respect made him feared by the wrong doers. One morning, when the gentleman was sipping his coffee, which he had placed a few drops of cognac, he looked up from his paper and said to Smiler:

"Markham, the mind reader, has run down another criminal, Smiler. What do you think of that?" "If I might venture an opinion, sir,

I should say that it was all bosh." "All bosh, eh? May I ask why?"

"Well, sir, it stands to reason, sir, that no man can tell what is going onin another's mind. It's against nature, and what's against nature can't be done, sir. My idea is, sir, that this man, this fraud, I will call him, sir, is in collusion with these fellows, and pays 'em. That's my impression, sir. A criminal, sir, can't be detected except by detectives, and they make an awful botch of it. sir."

"Well, now, suppose that I give you a little practical demonstration." "You, sir?"

"Of course, I have so many rings and pins that unless I was a mindreader I would never have missed these. And, let me see, Smiler, in your trunk you have three pairs of my trousers. Those would not be easily missed, either. Also about fifty neckties, and collars and cuffs innumerable.

By this time Smiler was as pale as a ghost. "If I were to read your mind a lit-

This has been your dream, Smiler, the life of the honest and prosperous tradesman, Am I right, Smiler? If I have made any mistakes attribute it to the fact that I am but an amateur."

But Smiler was speechless. "To continue, or rather to go back into the past, I read that you robbed all your masters before me, only they were not mind readers in an amateur way and attributed the loss of different things to natural shrinkage. When you first entered my apartments in King's road your thoughts were regarding my worldly possessions. You saw much that made you sure I was a man of means. After I entered the room I was seemingly busy reading the newspaper. Really, Smiler, I was reading you. I did not want to see your references. They were superfluous. The man himself stood before me. There was the reference. I determined to make a little study of you. You interested me at once, for I recognized in you a thief of many years' training, a thief who had pilfered for all his life and never been detected. Here, I thought, is a subject worthy of my attention, here is a case which will edify and amuse me. So I took you to my bosom, Smiler, and employed you on the spot. As you stood there waiting for me to address you the thoughts flashed through your mind: 'I can easily get away with one of those Dresden-ware vases. He has so many of them that he never will miss it. Then he must be a careless sort of a swell, one of those spendly furnished house in a fashionable thrifts. He will come home inebriated every night. Am I right, Smiler?"

But Smiler never relapsed from his collapsed condition. "You began to pilfer when you purchased the tickets to France. You took to you right away. 'Here is a precious rascal,' I thought. 'Here is a servant worth having.' You remember I commended you for your faithfulness. And now, Smiler, do you believe in mind-reading? By the way, where are those pawn tickets, and kindly hand me your bank book." Smiler obeyed without a word. The languid gentleman went to the door and ushered in two officers. Smiler fell upon his knees.

"Mercy, mercy," he said. "You corroborate all I have said," remarked the gentleman, with mild interest.

"Yes, yes, I confess. Don't put me in jail." "I am sorry, Smiler, but I have finished with my subject. I now turn him over to the law. Officers, do your Electric Alarm Cash Drawer. A new and ingenious application of in 1887, and of modern European histhe electric alarm system has been made for increasing the safety of cash drawers. In the electric cash drawer the fullest provision seems to have been made against any system of tampering by outsiders, and the neart of the wayside thief may well be heavy within him. With an ordinary cash drawer, instead of the usual mechanical bell alarm, an electrical alarm device is used, consisting of a dry battery, a bell, an electric lock, and the combination of five contact keys, connected in multiple with the circuit. The combination is easily changed, and the keys set are externally indistinguishable from those not set. If the proper keys are touched the circuit is broken and the drawer may be opened with-out any noise. If, however, any but the right keys are depressed, the bell will ring, and the drawer will lock if any one tries to open it. The drawer will also lock itself if it is accidentally left half open, and the alarm bell will ring until it is closed. In addition to the local alarm, connection can be made with a bell in any part of the building, or even at the nearest police station, so that instant warning can be given either by night or by day of the manipulation of the cash drawer by any unqualified person.

Killing Rats by Electricity.

A Philadelphia electrician has "gone better" on Edison's familiar cockroach-killing device. The proprietor the yard, which terminated in a hole coils of cepper wire about the hole, he made an attachment to the electric light wires within the building, and fixed in a convenient place a key for turning on the current. When everything was in readiness, a watch was kept on the hole, and as soon as a dozenrats were playing about the inclosure, the key was turned. As the rats returned one by one to the hole, they were unmistakably electrocuted. The plan worked to a charm, and the story goes that in this way nearly 100 rats have been killed off in a little over a

TWO BACK NUMBERS

'Steve" Dorsey and Henry G. Davi Now Unknown Politically.

New York seems to be the haven of the political back number. In an afternoon stroll down Breadway and through Wall street one is sure to meet a dozen men who were once powerful in state national politics, but who, for one reason or another, have fallen by the way and are now seldom heard of outside a limited circle of friends and business associates.

It was in Wall street that I ran across ex-Senator Dorsey of Arkansas, the other day, much grayer than when he managed the famous Garfield campaign, but still as erect, wideawake and vigorous as of old. What a career Dorsey has had! He has made and lost three fortunes, and is now, I am told, in a fair way to win a fourth.

Dorsey was born in Vermont and reared on an Ohio farm. During the war he served as a private in the army of the Potomac. After the war he turned up in Arkansas, and by reason of great natural shrewdness and a esolute character soon became the leader of the band of carpet baggers who then overran that state. He was made chairman of the republican state committee, secured a fortune as president of the Arkansas Central railroad. whose bonds he had indorsed by the state legislature, and in 1873 was elected United States senator.

In 1880 he was chairman of the republican national committee, and the story of how he managed the campaign resulting in Garfield's election is a familiar one. He was then one of idols of his party. In 1881 came the star route exposure, and with it Dorsey's political downfall. Since then he has been engaged in cattle raising in the west, but in this field disaster has twice overtaken him.

The Star route trials cost him a fortune. He is now making another as a promoter of New Mexico mining properties. If Dorsey would tell all he knows about the formation of Garfield's cabinet and its effect on his own political fortunes the story would make most interesting reading and would give several gentlemen still prominent in politics a very bad quarter of an hour.

Henry G. Davis, who was Dorsey's associate in the senate, now has an office in one of the big buildings on lower Broadway. He still claims West Virginia as his home, but spends the greater part of his time in New York. Since he began life as a brakeman on the Baltimore & Ohio road, Davis has played many parts, and played them well. He has been president of a bank, member of both branches of the West Virginia legislature, director in half a dozen author of the "History of Prussia to railroads and United Senator for six years. Miss Alice King, the blind novelist, who died recently in England, must have been a woman of extraordinary perseverence. She was born with defective vision, and became totally blind at the age of seven. Nevertheless, her education went on under her mother's guidance, and she acquired by ear seven languages. She learned to use a typewriter, with which she wrote her manuscripts, which were afterward read to her by her sister. Most of the proceeds of her literary work were devoted to benevolences.

The Legion of Honor.

The appointment by the French government of Mr. James Stokes of New York as a knight of the Legion of Honor of France, is pleasing to his friends in that city. Mr. Stokes has always given liberally to the various branches of the Young Men's Christian association, and it was owing tohis donation to the Y. M. C. A. of Paris that the government honored him. It is said that Mr. Stokes and his family gave more than four hundred thousand francs to this cause in Paris alone.
