The Mergenthaler typesetting machines are being so heavily taxed in various parts of the country that their owners have had to resort to court. This tax on machines is all wrong. It cannot stop the tide of progress as indicated by invention. The fault with the machinery lies not in the fact that they cheapen and facilitate production, but that the product is not equitably distributed.

Dick, over whose half-conscious head this sword-play was flickering, saw only that an argument was going on; which side was which, and why, he could not understand, and so resolved to speak with caution if he had to speak at all. Camilla felt that the colonel was pressing her closely, and tried to dis-able him by a straighter thrust.

"I don't suppose you are a blind follower even of Lord Glamorgan," she said to Dick; "you probably do not wish the emperor released?"

"It would not benefit him if I did," he replied; "but I am sorry for him if he suffers as they say."

This was worse than ever for Dick, and the colonel was prompt to seize the opportunity. "He does indeed suffer." he said. "It is our greatest grief, for Madame de Montaut is entirely devoted to him." "My devotion," retorted Camilla, al-most indignantly, "is natural enough; but the loyalty that binds me can have no hold upon an Englishman." "There are more kinds of loyalty than one," returned her imperturbable antagonist. "I, for instance, am loyal to the emperor, not only as a Frenchman, but even more strongly from my loyalty to you, who have made his cause your own; and this, or something like it, may conceivably be the case with oth-

Camilla looked unutterable scorn. "Capt. Estcourt," she said, turning to him with a bow full of graceful mock-ery at her own question, "will you, as a kindness to me, carry the emperor off from St. Helena?"

Dick was relieved at her apparent return to a lighter mood. "I can hardly undertake to go so far myself," he replied laughing; "you had better commission my friend Johnstone, the smuggler, to do it for you."

"Good!" exclaimed the colonel, joining in the laugh with the loud tone of one who wishes to emphasize a jest. "Capital advice, Camilla, and you can't do better than follow it."

She did not for the moment grasp his intention in saying this, and made no reply beyond a distrustful glance. Dick, meantime, had been looking at his watch, and now held out his hand. "I am afraid," he said, "that I must be going home; I have trespassed too long upon your kindness, and the doctor said I must be in by sunset." "One moment," said Camilla, hoping to gain an instant's privacy in which to give him some kind of warning.

"There is no choice," she answered! | CAN MAN REVERT TO THE APE? 'I have no friend capable of an act of Studying the Antics of Three Greek treason." "Monkey Children." He saw that he had been over-confi-We have to do with three children dent, and was ready on the instant to DROPSY.

"Stav a moment: Col. de Montaut will order the carriage for you." "It is at the door," replied the colon and he bowed Dick out before him, and followed him downstairs. Camilla heard the front door close and the carriage drive away. A long silence followed. The colonel had evidently gone to the length of accompanying Dick to his own lodging. The mischief might be done by this time, and here she sat powerless to prevent it. She fretted under the thought at first, and her indignation chafed her in the absence of an object upon which to spend itself; but at last it seemed to have worn itself out for a time, and she fell into a quieter mood.

All the same she started guiltily when the door opened almost without a sound. There stood the colonel, like some wilv emissary of evil. following up his calculated opportunity at the most deadly moment of weakness. He appeared to have entirely forgotten his late struggle with her. In his hand was an open letter, which he held up to her view. "I have just heard," he said, "from Carnac, who has received a letter from St. Helena."

She held out her hand for it. "You are tired," he said; "I will read it to you. Be prepared, for it is far from pleasant hearing;" and he began at once:

The letter-or, at any rate, his reading of it-ran as follows:

'''My Dear M. de Montaut: A packet dispatched from St. Helena at the end of January contains the following melancholy intelligence in the cipher of Gen. Bertrand: The emperor, having suffered severely in health from want of active occupation, on Jan. 22 resumed his riding exercise, after an intermision of two years. The effect of this violent change of habit was unhappily the reverse of beneficial, and he has been more or less prostrate for a week past.'"

The colonel looked at Camilla, and went on more slowly:

"'His majesty has become subject to fits of profound depression, which are the despair of his physicians. He bitterly declares himself deserted and hetrayed, and his reproaches are terrible to hear. He talks openly of committing his last wishes to paper''

In her agitation at this news Camilla forgot everything else. "Oh, no!" she cried, clasping her hands as though to entreat the cruel fates. "We shall be In time; we must, we must!"

"We must!" he echoed gloomily; "they expect us on the 5th of May."

'And when do we start?' "Before the beginning of April: we have hardly more than a week left in which to gather our forces for this final attempt."

She was silent, and seemed unwilling to venture further into the region of detail. "The vessel is all but ready," continued the colonel; "a mixed crew can be collected in a day or two at Deal or Ramsgate."

He paused, as if expecting a question from her; but she was still silent, and he went on again.

"No," resumed the colonel, "he must be an Englishman, and one upon whom we can exert an irresistible moral force. But that is not enough," he added. quickly, and she almost breathed again. 'The second qualification is this-he must be a man known favorably to the authorities here in England, or at the least to those at St. Helena. Otherwise he would be unable to obtain leave to anchor, and he could not face those naval police without fear of suspicion. We should be searched," and here his voice fell to a low, clear tone, "searched and seized, or driven from the coast, and the emperor must die a brokenhearted exile." Camilla buried her face in her hands

The colonel looked down upon her with a faint smile of self-congratulation. "Very well, then," he said, "for the present we will discuss the question no further. I will do my best to secure Johnstone, and I leave you to think the other matter over by yourself; it is quite possible that you may be able to discover among your English friends some one-an officer, perhaps-who will at your persuasion, if for no other reason, help us to save the emperor and France. She did not move or speak; when at last she looked up he was gone. But every word that he had spoken, and every tone of his subtly modulated voice, passed through her brain over and over again with a paralyzing clearness; and she sat on, as if under some horrible spell. At the end of half an hour she was still there, her mind wearled out with vainly beating against the constraint of this hateful necessity. like a bird buffeting itself to death against the bars of a trap.

She was roused by the crackling of paper beneath her hand, and looking down found that she had been clenching a letter in her unconscious grasp A start of surprise followed as she recognized the appearance of the paper. It was Dick's application to the admiralty. The official to whom the colonel had presented it had glanced at its contents and handed it back with an off-hand statement that it was too late another man having been already appointed to the Favorite. The colonel had accordingly brought it back to Dick, and in the confusion which followed the latter's sudden attack of illness it had fallen unperceived behind a cushion of the sofa upon which Camilla was now sitting. Anxious to free herself from the toils without a moment's delay, she rose and went down to look for her brother-inlaw.

She found him in the study, busy among his papers; he looked up to greet her with an indulgent smile, as if to assure her that he felt for her past struggle, and was ready to receive her submission graciously.

She saw it, and anger choked the words in her throat. "Well," he asked, "and upon whom has your choice fallen?"

The closed carriage in which he left the house set him down at the entrance of the narrow streets beyond the houses of parliament, and immediately disappeared in the direction in which it had come. He quickly made his way to the river side and hailed a waterman to take him over to the other bank. When the boat was rather more than half way across, however, he appeared to change his mind, and asked whether he could be taken as far as the Tower.

The waterman assented readily, gave a single stroke with the left hand, and in a moment the current was sweeping them rapidly down toward the bridge. It was a bright, keen morning, and the boatman was in a cheerful mood and inclined to be talkative as is the custom in his trade; but he got little response or attention from his fare, who was nondering his next move, and had not yet come to the stage when conversation would be of use to him. (TO BE CONTINUED.)

Now, I'd like to contract to sell you my crop for 70 cents. Seventy cents will do me. I'd rather have a sure thing while it's Fine Masonic Temple Dedicated at Grand Rapids .-- I. O. O. F. Grand Lodge and Daughters of Rebekah Convention at Saginaw.-Brief Mention.

Grand Rapids Masons Dedicate a Temple With a fine autumn day, a large number of visitors and the city most gorgeously decorated the Masons of Grand Rapids were very happy on the day of the dedication of their new seven-story temple. There were Masons from all parts of the state, but of course the star attraction of the big parade was the champion Detroit Commandery Knights Templar, which occupied the position of honor in the parade, which was one of the finest ever witnessed in that city. The ob-jective point of the parade was the Masonic temple. The ceremonies of the day were performed in the magnificent blue lodge room, and were con-ducted by Grand Master E. L. Bowring, assisted by the other grand officers. Only members of the fraternity were allowed within the lodge room. The exercises closed with brief addresses by Grand Master Bowring, Deputy Grand Master J. J. Carson, Grand Secretary J. S. Conover, Grand Warden Lou B. Winsor and Past Grand Commanders Judge John W. McGrath, Judge John W. Champlin, Judge George H. Durand, Hon. Hugh Mc-Curdy, A. M. Clark and others. The reception in the evening was a brilliant social function and the attendance reached several thousands. The Masonic temple was elaborately illuminated, both within and without. Michigan Grand Lodge I. O. O. F. The fifty-first grand lodge of the I. O. O. F. and the twelfth state convention of Daughters of Rebekah was held at Lansing. There were 600 delegates to the grand lodge, and 300 to the con-vention. Gov. Rich made an address of welcome to a joint meeting of the two bodies and after responses by Grand Master Salter and President Wiselogel, of the convention, the two bodies separated for the transaction of their business. Grand Master Salter's annual address was very lengthy and showed a prosperous year for the order. it being numerically stronger in Michigan than at any other period in its history. During the year 18 new subordinate lodges have been instituted; forty-four Rebekah lodges have been instituted, and four Rebekah lodges were reinstated. Three Odd Fellows and 12 Rebekah lodges surrendered their charters, and seven new halls were dedicated. The cornerstone of the Odd Fellows' temple at Port Huron was laid during the year. The Daughters of Rebekah confined their first day's proceedings to hearing reports of committees, and organizing the convention. Union degree staff of Grand Rapids exemplified the work of the Rebekah degree in the presence of the grand officers and a large number

They did not interfere with the British and merely went to celebrate the national holiday with some friends. The British insisted that Venezuela should give assurances that no more soldiers should cross. The Venezuelan government could not accede, however, because such an assurance would been a tacit admission of the British claims on the territory. Hence the refusal. The official statement from the Venezuelan foreign office covers also the policy of Vene-zuela in case the British attempt to build the military road recommended by British Minister Chamberlain. > How the Work of Improvement Is Speeding in the Land-A Power Has Arisen to Spread the Banner fo Purity.

At the third day's meeting of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of America at Baltimore, Sunday, the following reports were read: Mary D. Tomlinson, who read the report on "Parlor Meetings," said: "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world," and an ancient Roman orator bestowed a flattering compliment upon the homes of Roman mothers when he said: "The empire is at the fireside." Thirteen hundred and forty-two parlor meetings have been held; 1,400 members and 308 honoraries were gained. Fifteen hundred and sixteen dollars were raised at these social meetings.

The report of the purity department showed that much good work had been done in the last legislative year.

The report on purity in literature and art shows that nothing may enter that defileth or maketh ashamed. The report finishes with the statement: "We scrutinize the literature on newsstands and have secured the co-operation of the American News company; also of superintendents of railroads, steamboats, libraries, mail matter, bill posters, shows, exhibitions and art galleries. We have sent out petitions and letters throughout the entire United States for an elevated press, indorsed by the National Editorial Association of the United States by strong resolutions. Also by state associations; notably New York state association. With the support of the present president of the National Editorial association in the work for a pure press. Bill posters have been cleaned, and many states have passed laws for the legal power of this department. Others have worked for laws and created a strong public sentiment for purity."

DROUTH IS SEVERE.

Scarcity of Water in All Parts of th Country.

Washington, Oct. 21.-Reports received at the weather bureau indicate that the present drouth is one of the sceverest, most prolonged and general known in the United States since the bureau's organization. There are a few places which show an exception to the general condition, but in no large section of the country has there been a soaking rain for the past two months or more. Where there has been exceptional precipitation it has been confined to small areas. The greatest complaints come from West Virginia, Kentucky and western Pennsylvania. Fortunately, in most parts of the country the drouth did not set in until after the principal crops were matured, consequently the effect has not been disastrous. In some places it has had a slight effect on the planting of winter wheat, and complaints come from many quarters of the inconvenience of securing water for domestic Mysterious Murder of a Child. Much excitement has been occasioned at Ishpeming, due to the finding of the remains of Little Eva Lafreniere who mysteriously disappeared June 24. The clue to the discovery was a pair of shoes found by the mother of the child among a bundle of carpet rags passed by Mrs. C. L. Wendel, a neighbor, to Mrs. Lafreniere. The shoes were identified as those last worn by the missing child, and were at once turned over to the authorities. Marshal Carlson and Assistant Marshal Nolan entered Mrs. Wendel's house with a search warrant, and proceeded without ceremony to the attic, where they found the child's body concealed behind a chimney. The body had reached an advanced stage of decomposition. The left hand was gone, the head was severed from the trunk and the skull was crushed in. *

Russia Will Occupy Korea

A special dispatch from St. Petersburg says that an exchange of communications has occurred between the Russian government and the Japanese minister at St. Petersburg with reference to the recent disorders at Seoul the capital of Korea. It is added that the Japanese minister assured the Russian government that the culprits would be punished. But Russia is said to have replied that she would be forced in consequence of the riots to take the steps considered necessary to preserve order and to make the Korean government independent of foreign interference. As to the course pro posed, Russia will do her duty, whatever is entailed, without stopping to inquire whether other powers like it or do not like it. She will never abandon Korea, and will protect her against all encroachments.

This simply proves what has long been surmised, that Russia desires to secure control of Korea that she may have an open port on the Pacific coast It is true she has Vladivoostock, but that port is frozen up half the year and what Russia desires is such a harbor as Port Arthur, and it looks as though she was going to get it.
