Perhaps a cipher accidentally got lost when Mr. Cleveland was making up the estimate of his taxable property.

Sir John Lubbock's ant died recently. It was the insect that gave up so much information when he interviewed It, and not, as some obituary writers thought, a sister of one of his parents.

The Chicago Tribune gives this sonsible advice to the young man who wishes to know how to fit himself for going to the Klondike: "Acquire habits of self-control and industry; be prepared to meet with firmness whatever discouragements may arise; scrape together two or three times as much money for the journey as the best estimates render necessary; and don't go."

The National Association of Manufacturers is taking a practical step toward the promotion of trade between this country and the Latin-American republics in the initiative of a sample warehouse at Caracas, Venezuela. According to Mr. Richard Dolge, a manufacturer, who has only recently returned from that city, the conditions are now ripe for the development of trade in that place.

His silence often is loud as thunder, and his life is a dirge or a doxology. There is no such thing as negative influence. We are all positive in the place we occupy, making the world better or making it worse, on the Lord's side or on the devil's, making up reasons for our blessedness or banishment; and we have already done work in peopling heaven or hell. I hear people tell of what they are going to do. A man who has burned down a city might as well talk of some evil that he expects to do, or a man who has saved an empire might as well talk of some good that he expects to do. The formal talk that begins with a sigh, and ends with a canting snuffle, is not what is wanted, but the heart throb of a man in dead earnest. There is not a soul on earth that you may not bring to God if you rightly go at it. They said Gibraltar could not be taken. It is a rock, sixteen hundred feet high, and three miles long. But the English and Dutch did take it. Artillery, and sappers and miners, and fleets pouring out volleys of death, and thousands of men reckless of danger, can do anything. The stoutest heart of sin, though it be rock, and surrounded by an ocean of transgression, under Christian bombardment may hoist the flag of redemption. Again: Christian workers shall be up at the night, and see each world show its distinct glory. It is not like the conflagration, in which you cannot tell where one flame stops and another begins. Neptune, Herschel, and Mercury are as distinct as if each one of them were the only star; so our individualism will not be lost in heaven. A great multitude-yet each one as observable, as distinctly recognized, as greatly celebrated, as if in all the space, from gate to gate, and from hill to hill, he were the only inhabitant: no mixing up-no mob-no indiscriminate rush; each Christian worker standing out illustrious-all the story of earthly achievement adhering to each one; his

All space open before you with nothing to hinder you in mission of light and love and joy, you shall shine in swiftness of motion as the stars for ever and ever. Again: Christian workers, like the stars, shine in magnitude. The most illiterate man knows that these things in the sky, looking like gilt buttons, are great masses of matter. To weigh them, one would think that it would require scales with a pillar hundreds of thousands of miles high, and chains hundreds of thousands of miles long, like the stars in the fact that they have and at the bottom the chains basins on a light independent of each other. Look | either side hundreds of thousands of miles wide, and that then omnipotence alone could put the mountains into the scales and the hills into the balance. But puny man has been equal to the undertaking, and has set a little balance on his geometry, and weighed world against world. Yea, he has pulled out his measuring line, and announced that Herschel is 36,000 miles in diameter, Saturn 79,000 miles in diameter, and Jupiter 89,000 miles in to water, and that, therefore, a clay diameter, and that the smallest pearl soil-and particularly if it has assumed on the beach of heaven is immense beyond all imagination. nor upon the power of the sun to carry it off by evaporation: but upon the character of the sub-soil. If that is are better protected than others of sand or gravel the water will pass off below by natural drainage; but if the sub-soil is clay or other impervious substance, the water is checked in its downward course and remains stagnant or bursts out upon the surface in the form of springs. Most of the prairie lands are of the latter character, and wherever such sub-soil exists the land will not only be improved by tile drainage, but it may be said that such drainage is absolutely essential to its proper development and culture. To question the necessity of the process is little less absurd than it would be to ask whether it would be improved by plowing, instead of making hills for corn in the prairie grass with a hoe or spade. All lands require drainage which, at any season, contain too much water-that is, which hold at any time of the year more moisture than is good for the crops, and causes them to suffer, either by freezing out in winter, or having their roots in water during the growing season. Drainage has been appropriately defined as " the art of rendering land not only so free from moisture that no superfluous water shall remain in it, but that no water shall remain long enough to injure or retard the healthy growth of such plants as are required for the sustenance of man or beast." There are some plants, as rice and cranberries, which require a wet soil, but most of those which are useful to man, are drowned by being overflowed for a in the final struggle the trees best short time, and are injured by any adapted to the soil at any given localstagnant water about their roots. heights of 100 to 300 feet above the earth. The fight for place and existence is now chiefly between the evergreens and the broad-leaved or deciduous trees, and in this struggle the broad-leaved trees are so far superior that the evergreens have already been driven to a great extent to the less temperate, cold regions or to the drier and less favorable soils. Methods of Spreading and Growth .-

The distribution of forest trees depends not only upon the characteristics of the particular kind and its adaptability to the soil and climate, but also upon the chance of distribution of the seed and the provision against its destruction by animals. Many trees are subject to the depredations of various insect enemies which may prevent seeding or may even destroy the tree; and the seeds of most trees form a more or less palatable food for birds or beasts. Some trees against these chances of destruction and the better protected trees stand a correspondingly better chance of increasing in numbers and surpassing Jas. Tennant, - Cass City. the other kinds. If the squirrels or the wild pigs find the nuts of the white oak sweeter and more wholesome than those of some other oaks the standing white oaks will leave few if any descendants and will eventually disappear, while the red oaks flourish. In entering upon new ground the trees having the lightest seeds will be the first to take possession, their seeds being carried to greater distances than those of the others. The light seeds of the willow or the seeds of the maple which, although heavier, have upon them wing-like attachments, will enable their kind to far outstrip the nutbearing trees, like the walnut, hickory and oak. These heavy-seeded trees are limited in their reproduction, practically to the distance at which a nut falls to the ground or to the chance distribution by the forgotten hoards of the squirrel. By the swiftness of their march the light-seeded plants will thus more quickly reach regions where the rainfall is just sufficient to furnish the roots enough moisture or the growing season is just long enough to enable them to mature the wood of each year's growth. Beyond this point they cannot live. The heavy-seeded forms are plodding surely along behind them and dition for service at a moment's notice. This fleet would have a total armament of 209 big rifles, to say nothing of the secondary batteries. It would be amply sufficient to blockade Cuba, and the weight of metal is far heavier than anything Spain has in or could send into Cuban waters.

New York Fleet Ready. In addition to this fleet of heavyweights there are now assembled at New York the torpedo boats Porter, Ericsson, Cushing, Foote, Stiletto and Dupont. They and the ships of the North Atlantic squadron will be kept in West Indian and gulf waters during the winter months. If all is well they will cruise as usual, but if there should be a crisis in Cuban matters the American fleet would be "lying around loose" in the immediate vicinity. Navy department officials make no secret of the fact now that while there is no purpose of making the slightest threatening demonstration, care has at last been taken that the North Atlantic squadron should be today stronger in fighting ships than at any time since the war.

THE BATTLESHIP INDIANA

At San Puriales, Santa Clara also, another fight took place the same day between the Spanish forces under Gen. Montaner and the insurgents under Col. Smiley. After three hours the insurgents retreated. Losses on both sides were heavy and the Spanish Major Vivar was seriously wounded.

A decisive victory was won on Sept. 9 near Artemisa, Pinar del Rio, by the insurgents, under Gen. Pedro Diaz over the Spanish battalion of Vergara. The battle was fought at a place called Damaso Campo. After a heavy fire the insurgents charged the Spanish lines and a hand-to-hand encounter ensued, with the complete defeat of the Spaniards. The Spanish retreated in disorder to San Jose and the Cubans folowed them to within sight of the town. Cattle are being sent into Havana from Punta Rosa, Fla., to supply the capital.

All the reports about the election of president of the Cuban republic are considered here to be premature. The general assembly of representatives held at Gualyamarillo, Puerto Principe, agreed before voting for the president to decide first about the reforms to be made in the constitution and the new powers to be bestowed upon the president himself. This discussion was a matter of several days, and if the election has taken place the results are not yet positively known.

In the World of Art and Letters

As the result of the development of our school system and the cheapening class of men and women who seek broader education, or desire to extend their knowledge along special lines. Their duties in life, or lack of means, exclude them from the universities. The Cosmopolitan Magazine has undertaken the task of bringing liberal education, in its broadest sense, within the reach of those who have the aspiration, but are deprived of the opportunity, Doctor Andrews, late of Brown University, has undertaken the Presidency of the Cosmopolitan's educational movement. The work, thus begun, is not intended to take the place of regular university work, but to supities. Those who are really in search of knowledge will find direction and It can do nothing for those who have not the desire to study. #### ONE OF TWO WAYS.

The bladder was created for one puroose, namely, a receptacle for the urine, and as such it is not liable to any form of disease except by one of two ways. The first way is from imperfect action of the kidneys. The second way is from careless local treatment of other diseases. CHIEF CAUSE.

Unhealthy urine from unhealthy kid-neys is the chief cause of bladder troubles. So the womb, like the bladder, was created for one purpose, and if not doc-tored too much is not liable to weakness or disease, except in rare cases. It is situated back of and very close to the bladder, therefore any pain, disease or inconvenience manifested in the kidneys, back, bladder, or urinary passage is often, by mistake, attributed to female weakness or womb trouble of some sort. The error is easily made and may be as easily avoided. To find out correctly, set your urine aside for twenty four hours; a sed iment or settling indicates kidney or bladder trouble, The mild and the extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, and blad-der remedy is soon realized. Sad Attempt at Double Suicide. George J. Bunday, aged 28, until recently of Albion, was secretly married at Chicago to Miss Blanche Warren, of Bay City, whom he had courted for several years, but to whom his parents were opposed, claiming that being a working girl she was not his equal in society. After their marriage the couple went to Milwaukee and took rooms at the fashionable Plankinton hotel, and Bunday telegraphed the news to his father in Chicago and asked his forgiveness. The latter replied that he would not receive them in his home or have anything to do with them. When Bunday told his bride this they had a sad time trying to comfort each other and at last decided signed. During that time he has conit would be better for them to die. Each then took a dose of morphine and went to bed, and when they were discovered the next morning Bunday was instantly killed by the cave-in of a dying, but his wife was saved by gravel pit in which he was working. prompt attendance.

Such lawlessness is intolerable and all the power of the state, if necessary, will be vigorously employed for the arrest and punishment of all parties implicated.

The Situation at Hazleton.

The situation among the striking anthracite coal miners about Hazleton, Pa., is quiet, the presence of the military having a good effect. Gen. Gobin refuses to allow the arrest of Sheriff Martin or his deputies who shot the 21 strikers at Lattimer. While there are nearly 20,000 miners out there are some still at work and there is missionwork going on quietly to get them out. No attempt is being made to march or hold any meetings, but the agitators visit the working miners in twos and threes. About 250 women,

Noosing a Sea-Lion.

A correspondent of Ram's Horn narrates a pulling match between a sea lion and a farmer: Near Tillamook. Ore., an old German farmer chanced to be criving along the beach, when his watchful gaze was greeted by the sight of a large sea lion some distance out on the sand, fast asleep. It was the work of a moment for Jacob to make a lasso of a stout rope he had in his wagon, fasten the end of it to the hind axle, and adjust the noose over the sea lion's head. Then Jacob jumped into the wagon and started homeward with his prize. The sea lion did the same, drawn his resignation as president of and as his team was the stronger of the Brown university at Providence, R. I., two, Jacob started seaward at a good pace, and only saved himself and his latter having removed the causes of "outfit" by springing quickly to the ground, grasping his jack knife and cutting the rope.

Insuring Workingmen.

The German government provides a system of compulsory insurance for working men. Under this system a workman 20 years of age pays an equivalent of 40 cents a week for three years, and at the age of 65 he receives the sum of $77, in the meantime having had an insurance against accidents. The annual premium is divided into three parts, one of which master. "Mr. Elsden, Briargate," the man read aloud.

"Elsden," said the doctor. "I know an Elsden of Briargate-a big man with large white whiskers?" he inter-

"Ah, I don't know who he can be. There'll have to be an inquest to-morrow morning, and the best thing we can do is to telegraph to Elsden, of Briargate, directly the office is open. Very strange that the lady's friends should not have appeared."

"I shall lose my train," cried George Caulfield, seeing the last lingerers hurrying to their places. "Here's my card," handing one to the doctor. "You may communicate to me at that address. Any assistance that I can give-'

"Beg your pardon, sir," said the constable, laying an authoritative hand upon him. "I shall be obliged to detain you till this business is settled.'

"I shall be wanted as a witness at the inquest." "Yes, sir; most likely, sir. It will be my duty to detain you. Better not talk too freely, sir. Any statement you now make may be used against you later on." The curate looked at him with surprise. "Do you mean to say that I am your prisoner-that you want to lock me

"Yes, of course, I shall be able to explain," said George Caulfield, calm and bold, now that he found himself face to face with actual peril, "but it is a most painful position. I feel that a trap has been set for me."

"You had better hold your tongue,' said the doctor.

So the London Mail left without George Caulfield, who was conveyed in a cab to Milldale Jail, where he was subjected to the ignominious process of having his pockets searched by a jailer. In one of them was found the little bottle given him by the gentleman at Grandchester, and this, together with a few other trifles, was handed over to the authorities for investiga-

> This latter message was brief: "From George Caulfield, Milldale Jail, to Edward Leworthy, Freshmead Vicarage.-Come to me at once, for God's sake! I am in a great difficulty." Mr. Caulfield's janitor brought him a comfortable breakfast by and by, and was inclined to sympathize. He knew a gentleman when he saw one, he told the curate, though he had had to deal with a rough lot in this beastly hole. He had seen a good many murderers in his time, and the possibility of his prisoner's guilt made very little difference to his feelings. Guilty or not guilty, a man who was free-handed with half-crown pieces was entitled to respect. The difference between a half-crown and a florin, was just the difference between your real gentleman and the spurious article. The actual amount was not much, but that odd sixpence marked the distinction.

This functionary informed Mr. Caulfield that the inquest was to take place at four o'clock that afternoon. "Which gives you time to communicate with your solicitor," he added, grandly. "But I haven't any solicitor," answered the prisoner. "I never had any law business in my life.' "So much the better for you, sir," responded the jailor, sententiously; 'but you must have a lawyer to watch this here case for you." "I'll wait till my friend, the Vicar of old lady that her son was safe, and detained at Milldale on business. Some hcurs of anxiety the son could not spare that beloved mother; and it was more painful to him to think of her trcuble, when five o'clock came and brought no returning traveler, than to contemplate his own position.

"Dear old lady! I can fancy her and all her neat and careful arrangements for my comfort," mused Mr. Caulfield. "I know how distrustful she will be of the maids, and how she will insist upon getting up at four o'clock in order to see about my breakfast. And then when the time comes, and no hansom drives up to the gate, what agonies she will suffer! for I have never accustomed her to disappointments. I have never broken my word to her in my life.'

The curate fretted and fumed at the thought of his mother's anxiety. He was an only and an adoring son-at thirty-two years of age a confirmed bachelor, loving no one on earth as well as he loved the widowed mother whose cherished companion he had been from childhood upward. Had she not removed her dearly loved goods and chattels to Eton, and lived in a small house in the High street all the time her boy was at school there? Had she not followed him to Cambridge as faithfully as a sutler follows a camp? And now she had one of the prettiest houses in South Kensington, and her son was first curate at the most intensely Gothic church in that locality. George Caulfield's mother was the love of his life. He had been assisting at a choral festival at a small town near Grandchester, where an old college friend of his father was vicar, and had been only three days away from the dainty little nest at South Kensington, where blue china plates had just broken out like pimples, on a sagegreen wall, and where the Queen Anne mania showed itself modestly in divers inexpensive details.

"Poor mother!" sighed George; "a telegram can hardly reach her before nine o'clock at the earliest." He read his Tennyson: he dozed a little, he got rid of the night somehow and at seven o'clock he had written and dispatched two telegrams. The first was to his mother; the sec- | rival of the deceased at Milldale Junc-

I'm not the popular idea of a parson, you know, by any means; but I can serve a friend as well as your strait-laced specimen of the breed."

He was a man of abounding cheerfulness and infinite capacity for work, as prone to embellish his conversation with occasional flowers of modern slang as he had been forty years ago at Eton. He was just the man George Caulfield wanted in this crisis of his life.

He telegraphed to the Grandchester attorney, and got the inquest postponed from four till five. He saw the medical man; he talked to the police. A police officer had started for Grandchester by an early train to hunt up the owner of the card, and obtain as much information as could be got in a few hours.

The inquest was held at the chief hotel in Milldale, in a large dining-room, which was only used on civic and particular occasions. Here, under a blaze of gas, the curate of St. Philemon's. South Kensington, found himself for the first time in his life face to face with a British jury and a British coroner.

Mr. Hargrave, M. R. C. S., general practitioner at Milldale, declared that the deceased, name unknown, had died from the effects of a large dose of laudanum. There had been no post-mortem, and he saw no necessity for one. The color of the face, the odor of the lips, the abnormal coldness of the corpse, were sufficient evidence as to the nature of the poison. The bottle found in the prisoner's possession contained laudanum. Sensation! The railway guard and station-master stated all they knew about the arparish work is to get done." "Won't you employ the police?"

About London Had Trouble. The King of Siam has proved himself to be familiar with English history. He has not passed a regular examination, but has shown himself acquainted with the occupants of the tombs in Westminster Abbey, which is about the same. The King was shown about England's Valhalla by Canon Wilberforce. He coldly passed by the statues of Pitt, Livingstone and Herschel in the nave, but paused before that of Darwin. "Darwin, great man, I know him," he remarked. The helmet worn by Henry V. at Agincourt was shown him. He looked at it carefully and inquired its weight. He seemed surprised when told that it weighed nine pounds, twelve ounces. When shown the flags of the Knights of the Bath, he asked for the Duke of Wellington's. Queen Elizabeth's tomb impressed him greatly. All of a sudden he said, "Where is Mary?" No one knew exactly what he meant. Then he went on, "Mary-Mary, Queen of Scots." "She was beheaded," he added. This circumstance seemed to impress him, for in a moment he said: "Where is the other?" Soon it was understood that decapitation was the connecting link and that he wished to see the omb of Charles the First. He was disappointed to learn that Charles was buried at Windsor. In the Poet's Corner Tennyson and Scott received most of his attention. At St. Paul's he was shown the memorial of General Gordon, but shocked his guides by inquiring with great sincerity: "Who was General Gordon?" "Oh. he was a man very well known in the East." was the only answer thought necessary. Altogether Chulalongkorn showed himself to be a pretty fair historian, but better posted in ancient than modern events.

"How has it hurt you?" "How has it hurt me? Why, I can't get anybody to listen to me any more.
